Serving the Hamptons and Manhattan.

To the Southampton community, thank you for allowing Thos. Moser to be a part of your summer. We thoroughly enjoyed our time on Main Street in Southampton and appreciate the warm welcome we received. As summer has ended, it's now time to head back to our permanent location on Madison Avenue in Manhattan.

The encouragement and support we received from the moment we opened our doors was tremendous. We had the pleasure of participating in a number of community events, including the American Heart Association Gala, hosting the VIP lounge for Dan's Papers anniversary party, a charity event at Russell Simmons house and the dinner and educational event we hosted for Peconic Chapter of the American Institute of Architects. The strong sense of community that we encountered was invigorating, and we look forward to returning next year for another great summer in the Hamptons.

Thank you to all who visited us in Southampton, and especially to those who joined our family of Thos. Moser customers. We look forward to seeing you again soon, and hope you'll visit us in the city at 699 Madison Avenue!

All the best,

Thos. Moser

MEDICINE & MORALS
Your Jewish Guide Through Life's Tough Decisions

This new six-week course from the Rohr Jewish Learning Institute will explore what Torah and Talmud have to say about difficult medical decisions. What's right? What's wrong? When should we turn to G-d? When do we edge too close to playing G-d? Case histories shed light in a remarkable classroom experience.

ALERT! MITE MADNESS!

FACT: Dust mites (bed mites) cause considerable health problems such as asthma, itchy watery eyes, sneezing, coughing and eczema just to name a few.

FACT: Synthetic pillows and comforters harbor more mites than goose down.

FACT: When we sleep we have our faces resting on a pillow and we are immersed in bed mite territory. Protect yourself by replacing pillows and comforters at least every 3-5 years.

WARNING: When was the last time you replaced your bedding? It MITE be time!

What They Call this Place Is What they Call this Place

By Dan Rattiner

The Hamptons is a hodgepodge of overlapping glaciers, landmasses, counties, proposed counties, forks, towns, villages and hamlets. As a result, people out here often refer to this place by a name that is not "the Hamptons." Instead, they use names that are often so different from one another that sometimes you have no idea what anybody is talking about. Enter a room full of people talking about the Hamptons and in 15 minutes you can hear it referred to as "the Country," "the East End," "the South Fork," "Peconic County," "the summer place," "Long Island," "upstreet," "the Point," "the Island," "the Hampty Hamps," or even – and this is really backwards "the North Fork."

The really interesting thing about all this is that the term used sometimes tells you more about the person using it than the place it refers to.

Here is a glossary of the names used and what that name tells you about the person who has uttered it.

"We're heading out to the Country."

This person is from the Upper East Side of Manhattan. When they had a house in Dutchess County they referred to it as "the Country." Wherever it is that they have a house a two-hour drive from Manhattan is "the Country." Could be anywhere, except for Philadelphia.

Sometimes the term used tells you more about the person using it than the place it refers to.

"We're going out to the East End."

Westsiders. Smart. Funny. Possibly connected with Columbia University or one of the uptown hospitals. Know history and geography well enough to be able to visualize the turning, twisty, fishtail look of the eastern end of Long Island.

"We're heading out to the South Fork."

This person is an environmentalist, a scientist, a preservationist and a history buff. He is also not necessarily from New York City. He could be from Riverhead or Stony Brook. And he knows perfectly well where the Hamptons are. But he prefers "South Fork" because his primary identity of the place is the place itself and not the people in it who are—as a matter of fact—just trampling all over it.

"I'm heading out to Peconic County."

This is a politician. Or someone very interested in politics. Years ago, the local people of the Hamptons tried to become a separate county by seceding from Suffolk County in which it resides. Western Suffolk was, and is, all suburbia. Eastern Suffolk is summer homes and farmland. The effort failed, so it was tried again and it failed a second time. Uttering the words "Peconic County" is an attempt to keep the concept alive.

"I'm heading out to the Summer Place."

This is a share house person, under 30 with a piece of the action on alternate weekends. Could be anywhere. They live at the house, drink at the house, swim and party at the house and sneak off into the bushes at the house. They sleep in the day and so really, since it is dark when they are up, have no idea where they are."

"I'm going out to Long Island."

There are two possibilities. One is that this person is a master of the universe with yachts, homes in various parts of the world and a private jet which—when coming out to the Hamptons flies in what appears to be slow motion for about 20 minutes from LaGuardia over this beautiful green carpet that is, in fact, Long Island.

Second possibility is that this is a person from Brooklyn or Queens. Although geographically

BREAKING NEWS

SHINNECOCK RECOGNITION IS OFFICIAL

The Shinnecock Indian Nation became America's 565th recognized Indian tribe last Friday. The deed was done when the judge of the Board of Indian Appeals, headed by judges Steven K. Linscheid and Debora Luether, declined to consider two frivolous objections to recognition. Later in the day, the Department of the Interior made the final judgment. The Nation, whose history is documented back continuously to before the settlers came in 1639, had applied for recognition in 1978.

The Shinnecocks celebrated over the weekend. Tribal Trustee Lance Gumbs said that the day of October 1 will live forever in the minds of the 1,400 tribal members. He also said that the sudden announcement of recognition came as a complete surprise to the Nation. It was feared that the matter of the objections might take as long as two years to be decided upon. In the event, it took three weeks.

With this recognition, the Shinnecocks have managed the remarkable feat of keeping together the traditions, tribal ways and family ties that are at the heart of this community, and at the same time join the mainstream of America. Now tribal members will get the same safety net assistance available to everyone else born in the United States—funding for education, health care, child care, seniors program and perhaps most important, access to credit to be able to better themselves financially.

Also down the road will be the opportunity for the tribe to own one or more gambling casinos. Needless to say, they have been getting a lot of help with this from the regional business community, even before the final tribal recognition became official. —Dan Rattiner

Railroad Finds a Solution in the Old Sag Harbor Scoot

By Dan Rattiner

The Long Island Railroad has been fiddling around in recent weeks trying to reconfigure their schedule to better match the needs of their customers. There have been some missteps. Early on in this, they announced that they would cease running the year-round, daily train that goes to Greenport. They've got a couple of other trains going out there in the summertime only, but by cancelling this one, they would leave Greenport and the other North Fork stops bereft of train service eight months a year.

They backed off from this idea after a big howl went up, but soon thereafter announced that one of the four daily trains that go to the South Fork year-round would be cut in the fall. Here it is the fall. They cut it. But there are three others.

The railroad has also been sued about these cuts. Since the railroad is part of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority (MTA), and the MTA considers that when it comes to taxes, the South Fork and North Fork are equal to the rest of Long Island. That there are a gazillion trains every hour as far as the rest of Long Island is concerned and only four or five here doesn't seem to matter to them, so a local group, spearheaded by the Hampton Luxury Liner Bus Company, filed a suit to stop this tax being imposed on those in the "New York Metropolitan Area" as completely unfair to the East End community.

Concurrently, our local state and county officials, also outraged at this new tax, have proposed that the two forks start their own railroad service. The service would consist of little two-car commuter trains chugging from station to station out here. And that service would be separate from the dreaded MTA and immune from their taxation.

The latest news is that the Long Island Rail Road seems to have taken to the idea of the little two-car commuter train idea. And so now they have proposed that they run such a service for the two forks.

Before I continue on I would like to note that the one train that finally did get cut is not cut all the way between Montauk and Penn Station. The LIRR seems to have drawn a line in the cinders about halfway out—at the station in Ronkonkoma. The train cut this fall does go out from Manhattan to Ronkonkoma. But it now stops there instead of continuing on.

In theory, one could take the old scheduled train from Manhattan to Montauk, get off at the new end of the line at Ronkonkoma, then have a friend drive 50 miles from the Hamptons to pick you up there. So the train

MAN BUYS A COMPANY AND IT KILLS HIM

By Dan Rattiner

Last Sunday, rumors went out that the man who had invented the Segway scooter 10 years ago had driven it off a cliff in California and died. An accident? A suicide? Disobeying the law about not texting while driving?

The first reaction to this seemed to be it's all very sad of course that this man died, but then, he died doing what he loved to do. People always say that they want to do that, either die doing what they love to do or die suddenly of a brain aneurysm so, just like that, all the lights go out. One knows what Hugh Hefner would like to die doing.

It is sad for everybody else that he or she left, of course, especially family and friends, and especially if he was a nice guy, but other than that, there are indeed all kinds of different ways that a person can die, and some of them do seem either preposterous or bizarre or sometimes, just plain funny.

This one seemed that way. But then, it turned out, that the media got it all wrong. As the story unfolded it turned out that Dean Kamen, the inventor of the Segway in 2001, was still alive and well and living in California. It turns out that the man who died, Jimi Heselden, was just the multi-millionaire businessman who bought the company a year ago. He has a big estate about 100 miles north of London, so big that hikers and hunters come on it and he is happy to have them, and he was out Segwaying down a dirt path with the latest model, rounded a bend and didn't make the turn. He and the Segway fell 80 feet down a cliff into the River Wharfe, and two hikers nearby saw this and ran over but the man was already dead, they reported. Investigations later revealed that, just to make sure there were no tongues wagging, he did die from having driven his Segway off his cliff.

At this point, the media, having righted itself from its earlier spasm of getting the wrong man on the wrong continent, then came to the conclusion that James Heselden was close enough to being the inventor of the Segway to be able to allow reporters to proceed to phase two. You know what's coming. It's sort of in the mode of THE WILDEST POLICE CHASES or AMERICA'S GREATEST CAR CRASHES.

The headline is KILLED BY THEIR OWN part of the landmass of Long Island, politically, these two boroughs are part of New York City and so are in no way part of Long Island at all. Therefore, when someone from Brooklyn or Queens goes over the border to Nassau County or anyplace east of that, it is all Long Island. The Hamptons is Long Island, too.

"I'm headin' upstreet."

The first English settlers to come to New York State came to the, er, East End. They crossed over from Connecticut in small sailboats, the leader of them settling in a manor house on what is now Gardiner's Island. Those of the servant class who worked for him settled on the East End up in Springs and Northwest. When these folks went down by horseback to whatever Hamptons they were going to, they went "upstreet." This usually meant East Hampton. But the term could apply to any of the towns.

"I'm going out to The Point."

Only a fisherman or a surfer would refer to the Hamptons in this way. The most distinguishing physical feature, as seen from a boat, would be the Montauk Point Lighthouse. Thus that is where they must go. The End.

"I'm going out to the Island."

Manhattan-based adventurer. One week it's Barbados, another the Canaries, another The Isle of Man. They fly out, not in corporate jets, but in bumpy small planes and when they get to the "Island" they hit the ground running. It could mean someplace other than the Hamptons, but if they're in New York when they say this, it's the Hamptons. Alternately, another person using this term might be somebody with a summer place on Shelter Island. But honestly they will use this term only if they are in the company of someone else who summers on Shelter Island.

"I'm heading out to the North Fork."

This is somebody who is an anti-Hamptons person. Someone who is not anti-Hampton would not use this phrase because they would not want others to know about the North Fork. The North Fork is the peaceful other fork of eastern Long Island. It's the Hamptons as it was frozen in time in the 1950s, but without the ocean beaches. Don't tell anybody.

"I'm hittin' the Hampty Hamps."

Believe it or not, you are in the company of P. Diddy himself or one of his colleagues. The Hampty Hamps, sometimes confused with the Hipty Hoops, is how the name of this place is known in P. Diddy's world.

"I'm headin' home."

That would be me.

deep sixed is just the eastern half of the schedule.

In any case, what the railroad is now proposing is that they offload passengers in Ronkonkoma and then board them on the other side of the platform onto little two-car trains called "Scoots" for the rest of the trip farther east. Ronkonkoma from this perspective, would become a sort of mirror of Jamaica, where you change trains on a platform before continuing on to Manhattan.

It does make a certain amount of sense. If you've got 20 passengers that want to go east past Ronkonkoma, why haul out a 15-car long train with these few people on it all the way to Montauk? Pretty bad economics that.

Unfortunately, the LIRR seems to be just making this proposal as a kind of gesture. They say it will cost several billion dollars which they do not have. They say it could be done by 2020. Don't hold your breath.

Meanwhile, there is a precedent for "Scoots." And I am absolutely sure that the railroad is using that word "Scoot" because of it. In 1927, the Long Island Railroad began a "Scoot" train between Bridgehampton and Sag Harbor.

At the time, Sag Harbor was hoping to see a revival of its fortunes as a manufacturing town and port. Sag Harbor had been a thriving whaling town from the late 18th century to the mid-1800s. But then the whaling industry came to an end. The whales had all been fished out. After that, the town's fortunes had badly dropped off. But in 1870, the citizens, noticing that the LIRR had come through the area without a stop in Sag Harbor because Sag Harbor was out of the way, petitioned the powers that be in the railroad to build a spur out to Long Wharf. Long Wharf would prosper with such a spur. And so the railroad built it.

At first it was a two-car train they dubbed The Toonerville Trolley. But in 1927, they built a one-car self-propelled vehicle for this ten-minute journey that they called teh "Scoot."

The little "Scoot" went back and forth

Can I Live Without My Windshield Washer Heater Motor?

By Dan Rattiner

I got a letter from Buzz Chew Chevrolet in Southampton last Wednesday. It seemed odd to me. I hadn't been there to service the Tahoe for several months so I didn't owe them any money. And the envelope had my address on the front written in longhand. When I opened the envelope, a check fell out. It was made out to me for $100.

"This check is being sent to you," a letter accompanying the check read, "because you have been part of a recent recall to fix a problem with your windshield washer heater motor. The result of the recall was the permanent removal of your windshield washer heater motor. We apologize for this inconvenience."

I gave this a lot of thought. Here I was, in a car that no longer had a windshield washer heater motor. I didn't know my Tahoe HAD a windshield washer heater motor. So what WAS a windshield washer heater motor?

I briefly thought to call Buzz Chew. But then I thought—I ought to be able to figure this out. Apparently, there was a motor, probably an electric motor that heated up the windshield washer fluid that shpritzed onto the windshield when a bird shat on it.

Everyone knows that hot water gets things cleaner faster than cold water. So this meant that with it removed, it might take twice as long to get the bird shit off. There would be more strain on the windshield wipers. There would be more strain on the windshield wiper motor—different from the windshield washer heater motor—more strain on my being able to see out my windshield, perhaps even more strain on the windshield itself.

Then I thought—do OTHER cars have heated windshield washer heater motors? Not that I know. This was a perk, apparently explained to me when I bought the car two years ago but which I promptly forgot. So this $100 was NOT to reimburse me for the various strains on the different parts of the car and my eyeballs, this was a $100 to reimburse me for a promised perk they could not successfully provide. My $53,000 car should have actually borne a $52,900 price sticker together with a note saying that this particular Tahoe did not have the usual windshield washer heater motor while others did.

I then thought of my car, which I love like a

MAN VERSUS POND GUNK IN WATER MILL

By Dan Rattiner

There was an all-day seminar at the 230 Elm Street catering hall in Southampton last Monday with the title "Peconic Estuaries: Call to Action." The public was welcome. And the discussion was all about the red and brown tide that here and there are occasionally turning our beautiful ponds into algae-infested goop. This problem has been going on for about 15 years. Scientists have studied it. And they can't quite figure it out. But they think it has something to do with all the landscaping and farming chemicals that are being constantly thrown into the ponds by runoff after rainstorms.

I didn't go to this, and I didn't assign anybody from the paper to attend the seminar. And I don't mean to be rude, but the reason is that we've been having these seminars and speeches for years and it's always the same. We don't really know what's happening.

On the other hand, it's as plain as the nose on your face what is happening. But nobody seems interested in doing anything about it. It means giving up the gorgeous landscaping on your property. It means, if you're a potato farmer, giving up on the stuff that kills all the potato bugs. Can't have that.

A good example of this problem is Mill Pond, the (sometimes) beautiful pond just north of the Village of Water Mill. I remember it from years ago. It was a pristine, sparkling blue body of water of about 1,000 acres all surrounded by woods. There were one or two houses on the pond. They were nothing special. People mowed small patches of lawns of those properties so you could get to them from the road. Other than that, they accepted what they got from nature as the landscaping around their place. Occasionally, an owner would go out there and cut down trees every once in awhile on his property to keep the view open and also to make firewood for the fireplaces inside. Ducks and geese lived on the pond.

In recent years, all that has changed. Now, wonderful summer homes sit waterfront child, now having endured the slings and arrows of other Tahoes as it drives along with its windshield washer heater motor removed, as one might have to bear the slings and arrows of friends mocking you for having a dentist pull a front tooth. Poor Tahoe.

I briefly then thought of the unnecessary opulence of even HAVING a windshield washer heater motor in this day and age of hard times. What an extravagance. And then I recalled how, after you let the car warm up in the wintertime, how easy it was to get the ice off the windshield with the assistance of what I then thought were little heating wires in my windshield but now realize apparently consisted of having a windshield washer heater motor warming up the washer fluid about to be shpritzed on the ice.

I would now be joining the legions of other car owners fumbling to use windshield ice scrapers. The hoi polloi. The great unwashed. This would be a perk that I would miss.

And so I then gave thought to the attempts at Chevrolet to solve the problem that eventually led to the removal of the windshield washer heater motor. It needed to be removed; it was my guess, because on rare occasions it might heat up in such a way as to cause the car to burst into flames.

Hadn't there been another windshield washer heater motor of a different design that they had used for other vehicles that DIDN'T get so hot? Hadn't our engineers and astronauts been able to land on the moon?

Apparently, the problem could not be fixed. Or if it could, it would be at such great expense to swap the windshield washer heater motor out with another that did not have this defect that it might cause General Motors (GM) to go bankrupt.

Better just remove it, a Vice President must have said. And send everyone $100. I wonder if the head of GM, who undoubtedly has a vehicle with a windshield washer heater motor, got his $100.

As I said earlier, I have been very happy with my Tahoe. However, now, I drive along imagining the place under the hood where the windshield washer heater motor once stood, and I think—are there any birds flying around? I hope we don't have a cold winter.

Scoot

between Bridgehampton and Sag Harbor every day for the next 18 years. It consisted of one double-ended railroad car. We publish a photo of it here. At the Sag Harbor end, it split into several parallel tracks out to the end of Long Wharf. At Bridgehampton, it linked up just to the north of where the station is today.

The "Scoot" was never a big success. And when World War II came along, it was abandoned and the rails torn out for the war effort.

Today, the railroad bed still remains. It crosses the Sag Harbor Turnpike about 300 yards north of where the tracks on the main line cross that road, and where the gates come down when the train comes through today.

The right of way exists from the southwest to the northeast as you head north down the Turnpike. It's hard to make out, but if you look for it you will see it. If you want, you can also go down it—it's a dirt and grass track.

In the late 1960s, a railroad buff in these parts named Ron Ziel proposed restoring the spur and turning it into a little steam train tourist railroad. He wanted to call it the Sag Harbor and Scuttlehole Railroad, and to that end put a big sign on the front lawn of his Main Street home in Bridgehampton for a while. Ron took me in a Jeep down the right of way, and it is just beautiful along the way. A short way down, it passes a series of magnificent ponds, which even today are only easily accessed from that right of way. But his efforts came to naught. Of course, today there is barely a trace of even the right of way out at Sag Harbor, though there are pictures of Long Wharf showing the tracks going out to the end of it.

Pictures of the old "Scoot" show a railroad car little bigger than a trolley car. The proposed one—for the whole east end and the South Forks—would be much more substantial. But I still wouldn't want to be in one if it was setting up for a head-on collision with a regular train. Anyway, that will be a problem for those in 2020.

Now What?

Public Radio Station Saved, Wally Smith Explains it All

By Dr. Wally Smith

For a community to be strong and solid, it needs many things: a vibrant economic base, arts and cultural institutions, community-building endeavors that help overcome social barriers and connect people of different interests. It also needs media, education, arts and cultural organizations that provide access to information, news, analysis, commentary, artistic expression, lively discussion, and the free exchange of ideas. This is the vital role of public radio: to provide a forum that enables all members of the community to connect.

Wally Smith is the General Manager of Peconic Public Broadcasting, 88.3 FM.

We believe there's far more diversity in our community than outsiders might think. The East End is emerging as an "urban-rural" community that hosts its own multi-ethnic, multi-cultural, economically mixed community. This reality informs the direction of local public radio.

For that reason, our goal is to make 88.3 FM an outlet that gives voice to the special issues, needs and interests of our listeners across the East End of Long Island and the southern coast of Connecticut.

In 1993, the University was given permission by the FCC to relocate its frequency from 91.3 FM to 88.3 FM, increase the power to 25,000 watts, and became a member station of National Public Radio. Since that time, 88.3 FM has built a portfolio of locally and nationally produced programming—now available on-air, on-line, and in HD—that represents a compelling mix of jazz, news, arts and informational programming. Now that we have successfully saved our station, with the help of the incredibly supportive East End community, we have become even clearer about what we need to do as a locally owned and operated public radio station.

Listeners can expect 88.3 FM programming to become even more community centric. The basic format of the station will remain an eclectic mix of music, news and entertainment. There won't be any major changes to the program schedule other than the inclusion of more local content in

PRODUCER AND DIRECTOR HAVE A MEETING

By Dan Rattiner

Now here is an experience that few people get to enjoy. It is a Monday evening and I am down at Sho Win Japanese Restaurant in Pantigo for a strategy meeting over beer with Dennis Lynch about our new film.

Lynch is the filmmaker who has made the full-length documentary King of the Hamptons, which will be shown at the Hamptons International Film Festival this weekend. I partnered with him to make it.

There are about 110 films in the festival. King (as we call it) made the cut and had been scheduled to be shown Monday October 11 at 7:30 p.m. at the UA Theatre in East Hampton. But when the gates opened for people to buy tickets for the movies in the festival, two films sold out right away. One of them was King.

Because of that, at a strategy meeting earlier, we had scrambled to figure out how to get ourselves in to see our own film. Now we were talking about the fact that a second showing, put in after the first sold out, had now also sold out. (It starts the festival. It is Thursday, October 7 at 2 p.m. in East Hampton.) So now what?

I say this is an extraordinary experience for me because though Dennis created and directed the film in 2008 and since then has put in a gazillion hours editing it during 2009 and 2010, it has fallen to me, by default, to basically be the producer of it. Thus the partnership.

I've gotten him the connections, I've arranged for him to film celebrities and have meetings with the rich and famous, and I have guided him—a complete stranger—through the whole summer scene out here in the Hamptons, he and his camera, taking him to film at secret ponds deep in a woods, aboard the largest yacht in Sag Harbor and so forth and so on.

"I'll not interfere with your creative process," I told him, "I'm proud to be part of this film. Think of yourself as Jerry Seinfeld. You're Mr. Creative. And I'm the network heavy. I have veto power if you step over some invisible Hamptons line."

What the hell do I know about filmmaking? Nothing. What the hell did he know about the Hamptons? Nothing.

"Okay," he said. And thus a bargain was made. He's made an amazing movie.

"So I'm thinking why don't we have some private showings over the weekend for theatre owners and distributors," I said.

"How do we do that?"

"We get a venue. Then we stand by the festi-

INVENTIONS and indeed the reports of such occurrances, dug up by eager reporters Googling away on hundreds of websites, magazines, newspapers and television networks is pretty startling and, in some cases funny and some cases tragic, just like the death of this poor man, God rest his soul.

One of those Killed by his Own Invention was a man named Franz Reichelt who's actual death while demonstrating his invention back in 1912 was filmed and is now on Youtube. Reichert invented an article of clothing that looked something like a very billowy cape and hood. If you needed to jump out of a burning building you could do so and this clothing would billow out and float you safely to the ground.

He decided to demonstrate it to an eager public by equipping a store mannequin with such a garment, taking it up to the first deck of the Eiffel Tower and then pushing it off so it would float to the ground. He was, apparently, a kind of short-tempered fellow and while they were getting the dummy ready he decided the hell with it, he'd do it himself.

I've seen the video. He steadies himself on an iron cross brace 100 feet up, raises his arms like a bird making the arms of his garment billow out, looks straight at the camera with a sort of fierce smile for a brief moment, and then swan dives off into space. That lasted about a second. After that, he came straight down, hit the ground and died instantly. He was 32.

Here are some others.

Jack Daniels, the inventor of Jack Daniels, made a lot of money, put it in a safe, got drunk, forgot the combination, kicked the safe, got an infected toe and died. This was in 1911 and it was before Penicillin.

In 1944, an American named Thomas Midgley Jr. invented an elaborate series of pullies that could be mounted over a bed to be operated by a disabled person to get himself out of bed. He was quite the inventor. This was his 100th patent. But this one killed him. Trying it out for the first time, he got entangled in it and it strangled him.

The Fourth Earl of Morton, James Douglas, introduced "the maiden," the guillotine, to Scotland. Oh, this is so sad. I think you know what's coming. Let's just say that that was the year James Douglas was implicated in the murder of Mary Queen of Scots' second husband and they caught him at it.

Here's another you can figure out. Otto Lilienthal invented the glider. It worked fine. But one day, gliding his latest model off a tall hill in Berlin, he lost his grip and fell 50 feet to the ground and died.

William Bullock invented the web rotary printing press. Where earlier presses could print up to 1,100 impressions an hour, this rotary, when speeded up to its top speed, could make up to 10,000 impressions an hour. This was a great improvement, but early on they did tend to break down. Bullock was trying to fix one in 1867, and had just pushed a belt onto a pulley with his foot when, uh, it started up.

In the Soviet Union in 1921, hopes were high. Lenin had led the revolution that dethroned the Czar just four years before. Communism was the wave of the future. That year an inventor named Valerian Abakovsky developed something he called an "aerowagon." This was a regular railroad train with a locomotive at the front and, above the roof, a large airplane engine and propeller to make it go even faster. Abakovsky boarded it with a bunch of Communist officials to take them on a trip from Moscow to Tula. It worked fine. But coming back, it did not. It derailed coming around a turn, caught fire and killed everybody on board.

Here's a bad one. In ancient China, Prime Minister Li Si was a chief assistant to the First Emperor of China Qin Shi Huang. He was also an excellent calligrapher and so, probably to the amazement of the Emperor and others, wrote down many of the state policies. One he wrote was something he thought up himself. It involved a way to painfully kill a person sentenced to death. It was called The Five Pains and told of the various extremities that would be cut off one by one and in a certain order to ultimately lead to the desired result. Unfortunately, he was charged with betraying the new emperor, Qin Er Shi. Bad idea.

I do think it should be noted here what a fine fellow Segway owner James Heselden really was. He made his money by inventing galvanized-steel mesh baskets that could be used as barriers against explosions and floods. Although originally a bluecollar worker who worked in the coal

An Interview with HIFF Director

David Nugent

By David K. Harris

With the Hamptons International Film Festival happening this week, Dan's Papers caught up with David Nugent, the festival's Director of Programming.

DP: How did you start working at film festivals?

DN: I studied film at Boston University. Then in 2002 I got a job handling the print traffic for the Nantucket Film Festival. I worked my way up and then started working here in 2007.

DP: How many submissions do you receive?

DN: About 2,000.

DP: How many films do you watch per day?

DN: An average of two, but some days it's as many as four.

DP: How do you determine the films selected?

DN: Our goal is to be balanced. We look for an array of quality documentaries, short films and narratives across various genres. Ultimately, we ask ourselves, "Will audiences enjoy this film?"

DP: What's the coolest moment you've experienced at a film festival?

DN: Last month, during our Summer Docs series, we showed Billy Joel's documentary Last Play at Shea at Guild Hall. I walked back stage and heard a piano being played in the Green Room. I peeked in and there was Billy Joel playing away. I stood in the hallway quietly and listened.

DP: What's the hardest thing about your job?

DN: Rejecting 90% of the submissions. I know how hard film makers work.

DP: What advise would you give to a filmmaker who continues to be rejected?

DN: If you stop trying you'll never do it.

DP: What are your favorite movie titles?

DN: Out Of The Past, The Man Who Wasn't There, Blow-Up and McCabe & Mrs. Miller.

DP: Will video on demand hurt the film industry and festivals?

DN: I'm not sure. It's very experimental right now. What's on our side is the movie-going experience.

DP: With films like Avatar and Toy Story dominating the box office, do you believe small Indie-films will find it harder to attract mass audiences?

DN: Yes, because studios are less willing to take risks. However, movies like Slumdog Millionaire find mass audiences, so you never know.

DP: What's the one "can't miss" HIFF event this year?

DN: If you enjoyed Toy Story 3, you have to attend the Animation Master Class with the filmmakers of Toy Story 3 on Sunday at 11 a.m. in East Hampton.

FALL LANDSCAPE CHECKLIST

PREPARE NOW FOR THE UPCOMING WINTER!

Plants need to recover from extreme Summer stress. Our natural Deep Root Fertilization does more than simply provide vital nutrients, it promotes healthy soil and improves root function without stimulating excessive growth.

Spring is a popular time to plant but fall has its' advantages. While the plants go dormant for the winter, roots continue to grow & store energy. When spring does come, the plant will be able to pop with growth right away.

Wind & Snow and Ice cause tree limb breakage & property damage.

It takes up to 50 years to grow a shade tree & just moments to destroy it.

Pruning requires knowledge, skill and specialized equipment. Call the experts. We are one of a select few companies accredited by the Tree Care Industry Association for ethics, quality our highly trained & professional staff, safety and complete insurance coverage

Talk to us about snow removal services before Winter sneaks right in.

We provide a full range of landscape services from initial concept & design through final installation, with complete ongoing maintenance. Your trust and respect are earned through our quaity of workmanship and service.

along the shore of the pond. The lots sold for millions. And so the residents, so proud of these very valuable lots, carefully groom them with the best landscaping money can buy, leading right down the front lawn and into the water.

The whole situation came into the news eight years ago. One day they woke up to find that the pond was bright red and all thick with some sort of gooey seaweed with the consistency of noodle salad. Nobody could go in there, that was for sure.

Actually, it was not for sure. The authorities said it might look really bad but it was completely harmless, just a natural blooming of algae very happy to be where there was a lot of nitrogen and phosphates. Looks bad. It'll go away on its own in a month or two.

Of course the residents around the pond did not want to wait for it to go away on its own. They formed an organization determined to deal with this problem in their pond. They did not call it the Mill Pond Committee. They called it Friends of Princess Noadonah Pond because although its been listed on all maps for the past 300 years as Mill Pond, there was a time, apparently, when an Indian princess, tired from walking alongside the pond, sat on a rock and took her moccasins off to wiggle her toes and rest up awhile. Naming the pond after her had a nice ring to it.

Anyway, the residents were visited one day by the salesman from a company called Solarbee that sold giant six-foot tall 10-foot diameter solar-powered paddling devices that would, when the sun shone, stir the waters of the pond thus annoying the algae enough as to make it go away. They had done this elsewhere. They had before and after pictures. They said the real problem was that there was no oxygen at the surface of the water. All the oxygen was down at the bottom. They would churn it up.

There was a cost to this, of course. It would not be cheap. It would cost $20,000. But the residents ponied up to have one. Or, well, three.

This got to be in the news because in order to put something this size into the pond on a semi-permanent basis (May to October), you'd need a permit from the Town Trustees. They applied. They got one. The company brought in their paddle stirrers and set them up. And the residents spent the next summer looking out at the three noisy paddle stirrers and noting that nothing was any different, except that besides the red tide algae which still hadn't gone anywhere there were now paddle stirrers blocking the nice view.

The Committee did this for the next two years to no further effect except to put more money in this company's coffers. The company said one year was not enough. They said the paddles had to move faster. They said they needed bigger paddles. It was all in vain.

This past summer, with the red tide back once again, the committee has come to a different conclusion. They are saying they want to shoot the fish in the pond. They will need a permit for that for next spring, so they are applying this fall. Their logic is that the richness of all the goop in the pond has been a real windfall for this very hardy and very aggressive but non-indigenous fish called a carp. Some of them, in fact a whole lot of them, have been sneaking up from the Mill Pond Estuary which is just to the south of the pond, which lets out (and in high tide lets in) the water from Mecox Bay and ultimately the Atlantic Ocean. Not only have they been sneaking up, but because they are hardier and nastier than anybody else, they are driving all the regular fish, who can't stand the red tide either, away. (The carp have teeth. The others don't.)

So it is the carp's fault. The carp eat wildly in Mill Pond. They poop in Mill Pond. And so the so-called natural circle of life goes around and round. Shoot the carp.

Meantime, another voice has spoken up about the pond. A photographer, going out in the rain, has taken pictures from an overflow coming down concrete sluiceways from a nearby potato farm has sent lots of pesticides (new pesticides much less harmful than those we used to use), down the sidewalks and culverts and into Mill Pond to make the soup in there even worse.

And so, as Kurt Vonnegut used to say, so it goes.

The Story of Facebook—In Your Face

Zuckerman

By David Lion Rattiner

Everybody is on it. According to statistics, if it were a country, Facebook would be the third largest in the world, and it is growing. The website is now so powerful that it has spawned a movie, has made billions of dollars, and even offers a new way of bullying called cyber bullying that is so powerful it is being blamed for teen suicide.

It would seem that Facebook is here to stay.

The Social Network is the new movie about Facebook. Last weekend, it was the box office smash with the number one spot. People wanted to see the story behind one of the largest websites in the world, and that is what they got.

Or at least, they got a few different versions of it. Nobody really knows the truth as to how Facebook actually got started but one version, which is presented in this movie, is that there was a scandal where Mark Zuckerberg, the founder and CEO of Facebook, stole the idea from somebody else while in his dorm room at Harvard. Those two other Harvard students are Hamptonites Cameron and Tyler Winklevoss, twins from Quogue.

The twins claim that they came up with the idea of connecting colleges online, which was exactly what Facebook did soon thereafter. But they say that they hired Zuckerberg (who is presented as a villain in the movie) to create the website for them. And then, they say, Zuckerberg went off on his own and created the website for himself, thus creating Facebook and eventually launching him into the upper echelons of American business. The movie also presents different versions. When the accusations were made and a serious investigation took place, not one of them, neither Zuckerberg nor the Winklevoss twins, were able to tell matching stories. So no one knows.

A few weeks ago, before the movie came out, Zuckerberg donated $100 million to public schools in New Jersey and told Oprah about it, many say, to save face on the movie, which portrays him as a very unpleasant fellow. The Winklevoss twins, who say the website was their idea, are Olympic rowers in real life and appear almost too perfect. Both of them are movie star handsome, both of them compete at the highest level of a sport that is considered to be one of the most physically brutal, both are Harvard grads and both have millions of dollars thanks to a settlement with Zuckerberg.

But how happy can they be, really, when they see Zuckerberg parading around on television and in business journals, when they feel (assuming they are telling the truth), that they should be up there running the show and having another three zeros at the end of their bank account balances?

One of the Winklevoss twins and Max Mingvela

Well, the The Social Network will no doubt ease that pain, as the movie's writer, Andrew Sorkin, makes it pretty clear by how he portrays these three he believes to be true. The actor playing Zuckerberg says, "If you two were the inventors of Facebook, then you'd have invented Facebook."

There is some truth to that too.

Facebook has grown from a site that simply connected students in college to one that is available for everyone everywhere (including kids). It has become so intimate with people's lives that users are able to create sort of a fake life online. The writer of the movie explained this phenomen beautifully in an interview with John Stewart on "The Daily Show."

"I think that socializing on the Internet is to socializing what reality TV is to reality," he said.

mines, he organized this business and soon became worth nearly half a billion dollars. He gave much of his money to the poor. He did have this nice estate, but did not flagrantly display his wealth at all.

Three years ago he became intrigued with the idea of buying Segway. The device had been expected to revolutionize the way people got around. But it did not. There didn't seem to be a proper place to use it, other than in, say places like airports or Federal Express buildings or big warehouses. So it did get along. But then it suffered through years of lawsuits from people who fell off while trying to use them. Kamen, the inventor of it, sold it, and then the company he sold it to was putting it up for sale again. Perhaps Haselden thought he could figure out a new way to use this device.

Now we will never know.

Did I tell you about this guy in ancient Greece? His name was Perillos and he invented still another twisted way of putting people to death. He built a hollow lifesize brass statue of a bull, and he took it to the tyrant Pharalis, who ruled Sicily. You put the condemned inside lock the door, then light a fire under the bull to make it yellow hot.

Here, I'll show you, he told the Tyrant. And he got in. The tyrant, being a tyrant, locked him in and roasted him, then threw his still-living body down a hill to his death.

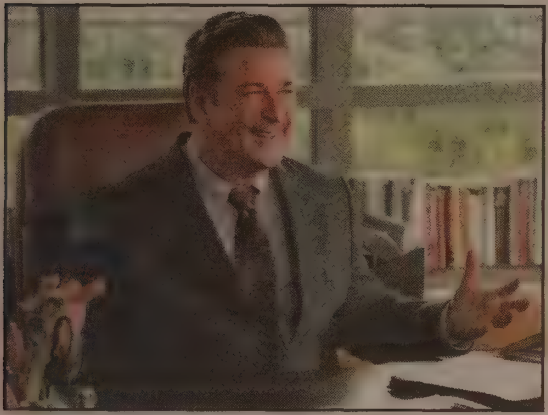
Nice to Have these Neighbors in the Hamptons



Amagansett's Alec Balwin

By Susan M. Galardi

The HIFF is filled with actors, directors, producers and brilliant members of the internatinoal film community who come to our fair towns for a few days every year. But right here in the Hamptons, we have our own glitterati, our neighbors who are a part of our community in many ways. Here are just a few of our favorites from a long list of Hamptons film royalty.

Alec Baldwin, Actor

In addition to being an incredibly versatile and talented actor who's equally at ease in roles from the most intense dramas (his recent star turn in Equus at Guild Hall) to the most absurd comedy (that would be "30 Rock"), Alec Baldwin has probably done more to support the arts, culture and community on the East End than any other celebrity. Baldwin has raised thousands of dollars for the annual Artists and Writers Softball game in East Hampton where he has served as an umpire and cut a mean figure at the plate. He has been a supporter of EcoFarm, a community organic farm divvied up into plots tended by residents. In 2007, Baldwin founded East Hampton Conservators, a political action committee with a mission to control development and environmental protection of the town. He also serves on the board of directors of the East Hampton Day Care Learning Center.

Related to his chosen profession, Baldwin is on the Board of Trustees of Guild Hall, and the Board of the Hamptons International Film Festival (HIFF). On October 7 at 4 p.m. he will interview filmmaker Julian Schnabel at Guild Hall as part of the HIFF Conversations With… series. For last season's HIFF "SummerDocs" series at Guild Hall, Baldwin led Q&As, most notably with music legend Billy Joel after a screening of The Last Play at Shea. Baldwin has performed at the Bay Street Theatre (in productions including Ira Lewis's Gross Points) and taught acting classes at the Ross School.

Baldwin's Broadway performance as Stanley Kowalski in a revival of A Streetcar Named Desire earned him a Tony nomination for Best Actor. He appeared frequently on and Off Broadway, in productions including Macbeth, Twentieth Century and Entertaining Mr. Sloane. Baldwin started his career in TV, but is well recognized for his roles in film including Working Girl, Hunt for Red October, Prelude to a Kiss, Glengarry Glen Ross, Malice, The Departed and The Cooler. He has won Golden Globe, Emmy and SAG awards. Born in Massapequa 52 years ago, Baldwin has been a resident of Amagansett for more than a decade. We're honored to have him.

Mercedes Ruehl, Actor

Springs resident Mercedes Ruehl is noshrinking violet in the Hamptons. She's out and about, often seen with her children at fairs, Santa parades and festivals.

But luckily for us Hamptonites, she is also seen onstage. The Tony, Golden Globe and Oscar-winning actress with the low, rough voice that rumbles your bones has appeared in many productions on the East End, most recently in the summer of 2009, in the role of Paige in Moira Buffini's Dinner at the Bay Street Theatre. I saw and loved the play, and in my review I wrote, "Mercedes Ruehl, dressed in a white crimped Grecian gown that seems to flow out of the formal table linen…tears it up as Paige, ruling the stage whether or not she has lines …

Her repeated phrase, 'We need drinks,' … is an acting lesson on how inflection and intention trump dialogue.'"

Ruehl had audiences squirming with this role, but the laugh-till-you-cry performance was her ballsy portrayal in Married to the Mob, with that ever famous line "What a f%*^ing dump!" Film buffs quickly remember Reuhl in Big, The Fisher King (which led to her 1991 Oscar for Best Supporting Actress), and the film and stage versions of Neil Simon's play Lost in Yonkers. She received a Tony as Best Actress for her role in the play, and a Tony nomination for the controversial role in The Goat, or Who is Sylvia? By Edward Albee. Last year, Guild Hall celebrated its 22nd Annual Academy of the Arts Lifetime Achievement Awards Gala at the Rainbow Room in Manhattan. Four people were chosen. Mercedes Ruehl was one.

Ed Burns in One Missed Call

Ed Burns, Actor/Director

Actor, director, writer and producer Ed Burns, who has a home in Springs, has never gotten far from his Long Island roots. Born in Woodside, Queens in 1968, Burns financed, produced, directed and starred in his first film The Brothers McMullen when he was 27, while he was a gofer for "Entertainment Tonight." The film was shot primarily in his hometown of Valley Stream. The next year, 1996, Burns—who's married to Christy Turlington and has two children—wrote, directed and starred in She's the One with Jennifer Aniston and Cameron Diaz. Sidewalks of New York (2001) followed. Of course Burns has also worked solely as an actor in films including Saving Private Ryan (1998).

Burns is active in East End life, too. In 2007, he and Turlington supported the Hampton Social@Ross concert by Tom Petty at the Ross School; he and his wife were recently honored by Rush Philanthropic Arts Foundation's Art For Life East Hampton. In 2008, Burns took to the stage with the band The Blue Jackets to raise money for charities at the Rock the Farm benefit. Burns, who played lead guitar, said, "I'm from Long Island… I am always happy to participate in something that lets us play and supports a charitable cause."

Chevy Chase, Actor/Writer

Most boomers know Chase as an early and wildly popular cast member in the very first season of "Saturday Night Live," where he premiered the Weekend Update segments opening with the line "I'm Chevy Chase, and you're not," and followed in the lines of Steve Martin with slapstick physical comedy. Others know him from the big screen, as Clark Griswold in National Lampoon's Vacation (1-4) and for his side-splitting roles in film comedies Caddyshack, Fletch, and ¡¡Three Amigos!. Now, Case is on the off-beat NBC sit-com "Community."

Chase in Vacation

Born to a prominent book editor /features writer father and pianist/librettist mother, Chase is a 14th generation New Yorker. The father of three daughters, Chase lives with his wife, Jayni in Bedford, New York, and comes out swinging in the Hamptons. East Hampton's Chevy Chase is a regular at the Artist and Writers soft ball game and has taken a swing at several other benefits on the East End, over the years.

Two years ago, he was the emcee for the 1st annual "A Night in the Hamptons" to benefit the Andre Agassi Charitable Foundation, at the Ross School in East Hampton.

In 2007, he was among the glitterati at a fundraiser in support of Hillary CLinton's presidential campaign.

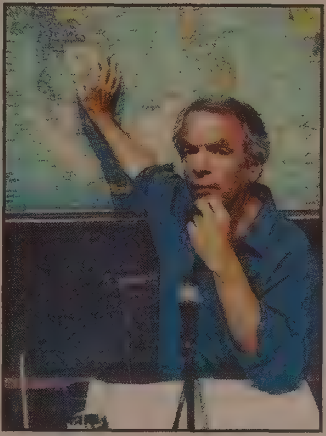
Steven Soderbergh's Spalding Gray

By Dan Rattiner



Swimming to Cambodia

One of the most astonishing figures on the literary scene during the last generation was Spalding Gray, the inventor of a form of literature called the epic monologue.

Gray would appear in front of an audience seated at a table with just some notes, a microphone and a glass of water and begin to talk. He'd talk for an hour and a half, about himself, about his parents, his girlfriends, his life in the theatre, his latest projects or whatever. Then everybody would go home, but not after giving him several standing ovations for his work. Some said their lives were transformed by his monologues. Others said they would never forget the things that he said. I was one of those people. I first listened to him on the lawn at the Parrish Art Museum in Southampton under a big white tent. He performed Monster in a Box, mostly about a giant book in manuscript form that was supposedly in the big box he had with him there on the table. He had been unable to finish it. He was going to finish it. He talked and talked. I have never heard anything like it. The experience was that you were having a drink with perhaps the funniest person you've ever met.

Once, I tape recorded a conversation I had with him. We were at Indian Wells Beach in Amagansett, and he was explaining to me how he had gotten roped into talking to me (as a newspaper reporter) about a charity called STAR he knew very little about but nevertheless had lent his name to. It will give you a sense of the rhythms he used in speech and the playful nature of his conversation.

"Well, there's two events with STAR. I think that Priscilla Star is doing one. I don't know where she's going to do it. Is it finally at the Star Ranch? But also, Billy Joel is doing an event. What's happened, there's a lot of disintegration and disharmony of egos in the STAR board because there's a lot of strong-headed celebrities that have opinions about what should be done when and I think that the powers that be at STAR felt that Priscilla was wrong in trying to have a benefit that would be confusing and somehow be kind of unproductive to the Billy Joel event. And why is her name Star anyway? So STAR is doing something with Billy Joel in July and Priscilla is doing something with jazz musicians in August, and I won't be here for either of them. I've been cast as one of the leads on Broadway in The Best Man. I will be going in for rehearsals beginning in May. I suppose my character is modeled on Adlai Stevenson and the other is more of a tricky dick person, you know, a Machiavellian politician and we're both running for President. We're also both in the same party but you're not told what the party is. The Machiavellian gets my psychiatric records to prove that I've had a nervous breakdown, and he's gonna release them. It's a lovely day here. I'll have very few days like this. I'm leaving this territory, you know we're renting our house out, we're going to Greece for eight days in July, then we're coming back and we will be up in Putnam Valley for the rest of the summer where Kathy is taking on a fresh air kid to hang out with Forrest."

Spalding Gray was born and raised a WASP on Rhode Island. His father was a partner in a white shoe law firm. He had two younger brothers, Channing and Rockwell. He summered at his grandmother's mansion in Newport. And everybody pointed him at a career in finance and the law.

He's have none of it. "I may look like an American ambassador's aide, or a lawyer, but I feel like Woody Allen," he once said.

He certainly was a disappointment to his family. He went to Emerson College near Boston and got a Bachelor of Arts in Poetry. He then taught poetry at the Esalen Institute in the Big Sur. He got parts in movies, in theatre and soon thereafter performed an extraordinary monologue called Swimming to Cambodia, based on his experiences in Cambodia, where

Kim Cattrall, Actress

Born in 1956, in the home of The Beatles, Liverpool, England, and raised in Canada, actress Kim Catrall is best known to audiences as Samantha Jones in the infamous HBO series, "Sex and the City." The East Hampton resident has had a long and busy career on the little screen, ppearing in everything from the Outer limits to "The Simpsons," "Rugrats," "Charlie's Angels," "The Hulk," "Columbo," "Starsky and Hutch" and "Trapper John, M.D."

Cattrall in Sex

But Cattrall's career started in film—with a bang. After graduating from the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, she signed a five-year film deal with director Otto Preminger, making her film debut in Preminger's Rosebud in 1975. Following that was a string of films, including the comedies Porky's and Police Academy. She played the beauty with brains in Big Trouble in Little China and had the leading role in 1987's Mannequin. Cattrall also has worked frequently as a stage actress the U.S., Canada and England. Author Cattrall published her first book, Satisfaction: The Art of the Female Orgasm, in 2003 with the help of her then husband, Mark Levinson. In 2006, Cattrall published her second book, Kim Cattrall: Sexual Intelligence.

Cattrall, who has had a presence in the Hamptons for over a decade, is often seen around the towns, dining at her favorite hot spots, and she's visible on the benefit and cultural circuits too. Along with Alan Alda, Joy Behar, Kate Burton, Richard Kind and Mercedes Ruehl, Cattrall joined Bay Street Theatre's newly formed Artistic Associates Committee last summer. She and Edie Falco were honorary event chairpersons for the Ellen Hermanson Foundation benefit in 2009, and last summer, and last summer Cattrall was one of the hosts of the HEAT party benefiting Ellen's Run. East Enders are so happy that , beyond "Sex and the City," there's Cattrall and the Hamptons award winning actress, singer and author (Academy Award, Golden Globe, BAFTA, Grammy and Emmy) lent her celebrity and support to her daughter, Emma Walton Hamilton, one of the original three co-founders of Sag Harbor's Bay Street Theatre. Andrews and daughter have written 16 children's books.

Baby boomers remember Julie Andrews of course for The Sound of Music, as well as her inspired leading role in Mary Poppins. Andrews made her Broadway debut in 1954 with The Boy Friend, and continued her rise to musical theater stardom with My Fair Lady and Camelot. More recently, the actress, who turned 75 last week, appeared as the voice of the Queen in Shrek and as, in her words, "one of the most terrible fun ladies you could ever imagine" in Despicable Me.

Andrews was the Honoree at the seventh annual Live at Club Starlight benefit at The Ross School, where her two grand children attend. She was recently featured at the Hampton Library's Fridays at Five, discussing her autobiography, Home—A Memoir of My Early Years. She and husband Blake Edwards originally settled in Sagaponack, traded it in for a farmhouse in Water Mill in 2001 and sold it five months later. Since then, they have lived in their three-bedroom home in North Haven. Wherever she chooses to hang her hat on the East End is okay with us: She'll always be one of our favorite things

Richard Gere in The Hunting Party

Richard Gere, Actor

Actor Richard Gere was put on the star map in 1980 as the leading man/sex symbol (hey, in the '80s we called it that) in the film American Gigolo. The dapper actor followed that success two years later with another box office smash, An Officer and a Gentleman, in 1982

He continued with the sweet Pretty Woman, nail biting Primal Fear, and his all out, spot on performance in Chicago that earned him a Golden Globe Award as Best Actor, as well as a Screen Actors Guild Award as part of the Best Cast.

After a four-year marriage to supermodel Cindy Crawford, Gere has been married to actress Carey Lowell since 2002, and they have a 10-year-old son.

Raised as a Methodist, Gere has been a practicing Buddhist since 1978. He is a staunch supporter of the Dalai Lama, an advocate for human rights in Tibet, and is Chairman of the Board of Directors for the International Campaign for Tibet. Gere was black listed as an Academy Award presenter in 1993 after he denounced the Chinese government the year before. He supports Survival International, an organization dedicated to protecting the rights and lands of tribal peoples throughout the world, and campaigns for ecological causes and AIDS awareness.

The "Sexiest Man Alive" (according to People magazine in 1999) Gere and Lowell still reside in their Water Mill home, which is on the market in the $7 million range. His palatial, traditional bay front home in North Haven (which I run past several times a week) has a pond with a small structure in the center that is being renovated into a meditation studio.

Jerry Seinfeld, Actor/Writer/Producer

Jerry!

A resident of East Hampton for more than 10 years, Jerry Seinfeld has become one of the most well-liked citizens of the area. Seinfeld, who of course built his fortune and fame from his brilliant TV show about nothing, bought his current home on Further Lane from Billy Joel in 2002 (for $32 million) and added to it a 22-car garage and a regulation-size baseball field. The field ended up creating a plotline right out of

Who's Here

Isabella Rossellini,

Actor/Model

By Susan M. Galardi

For those who know Isabella Rossellini, the stunning daughter of film legend Ingrid Bergman, as the face of Lancome, seeing her in a new role where she's ravaged to the point of unrecognizability would be a horrible shock. For those who know Rossellini as Dennis Hopper's abused partner and chanteuse in David Lynch's edgy 1987 S&M cult film Blue Velvet, it might not be such a leap—until they learn that Rossellini's new character is a female salmon, part of her short film series for Sundance called Seduce Me.

With a career that included a meteoric rise in modeling that put her on international fashion magazines for decades, acting as Lancome's exclusive spokesmodel for 14 years, and playing the role of the Italian beauty in films like Big Night, Rossellini's new venture is something not even her most avid fans could've seen coming. Those fans will have a chance to ask the actress about her turn as an aging, spawning fish and any other topic for that matter, during a "Conversations With..." program at the Hamptons International Film Festival this weekend.

Seduce Me (a series of short films about bizarre insect and animal mating habits) and Green Porno (an earlier series about the life and death of various creatures) were not such a departure for her. Rather, they are a continuation of a few of Rossellini's life-long passions: animals, writing, producing, conservation and even sketch comedy.

"Animals have always been my interest," said the actress, whose rich, mellow voice with an elegant Italian accent is a velvet all its own. "If you realize that they can make you laugh by their behavior, like funny ways of mating, you want to learn more about them. When you see that they are distressed, maybe you want to do something."

Roselini's opportunity to do something came when actor Robert Redford, founder of the Sundance Festival and environmental activist, suggested she make her own films.

"At Sundance, I showed my short film, My Father is 100 Years Old," said Rossellini, the title referring to Italian director Roberto Rossellini. "Redford liked it. At that time he was really looking at the Internet as a new venue for launching and distributing films. He asked if I'd do some short film, two minutes long, intelligible on a small screen. If it were something that related to the environment, Sundance might be inclined to support it."

> "I'd travel and be invited out by politicians and scientists, just because I was beautiful, you know—no other credentials."

Rossellini, who was born and raised in Rome and has had a home in Bellport for 20 plus years, took up the challenge by writing, directing, starring in and producing the first five live-action Green Porno films. "I considered how it might be watched—on the Internet, cell phone or other small device. The aesthetic for Green Porno—simple strong images and strong colors—was created for the small screen."

The same aesthetic applied to Seduce Me. Both series are outrageous, almost absurdist. The film Squid starts with Rossellini frying calamari and cuts her in a white tubular squid costume right out of Pilobolus dance group.

The 28-film Green Porno series, shown on the Sundance Channel and website, and available on YouTube, created a huge following and landed Rossellini on "David Letterman," "Colbert Report" and "John Stewart." The Seduce Me series departs in format, and served to dispense with the Green Porno title. "It's catchy and most people were perfectly fine with it. But I thought porno meant kinky sex. I learned that the word refers specifically to women and female exploitation. There is no suggestion of that in the films—no morality statement for humans as far as what kind of sex you should have. Seduce Me got rid of that confusion."

Creating the films was second nature to Rossellini, who began her career as a journalist for the Italian network RAI, where she wrote and produced short segments on arts and culture, both in Italy and in New York when she was still a teenager. The actress also got involved in sketch comedy in Italy, on the Italian equivalent of Saturday Night Live where she worked with Roberto Benigni. Green Porno and Seduce Me revisit that genre, with Rossellini in the broad comedy roles. Salmon opens with Rossellini as an old woman with a grey bun and cardigan. A hand caresses her face. "Is he seducing me?" she asks the camera. Cut to the actress in a comic book costume—bright fish hat, indigo turtleneck, and yellow goggles, lusting over a sexy male salmon. At the end, the old woman returns, this time decomposing with hair falling out, an eyeball hanging from its socket. She looks horrible—no mean feat for Isabella Rossellini. But that's not something she fears.

"It's not in my nature to worry so much about how I look," she said. "I'm realistic about aging— there's nothing I can do about it. My attitude is more fatalism than indifference. But perhaps because I've been a celebrated beauty, I can venture into other territories."

That celebration meant a dream career that any model would covet. Rossellini was "dis-

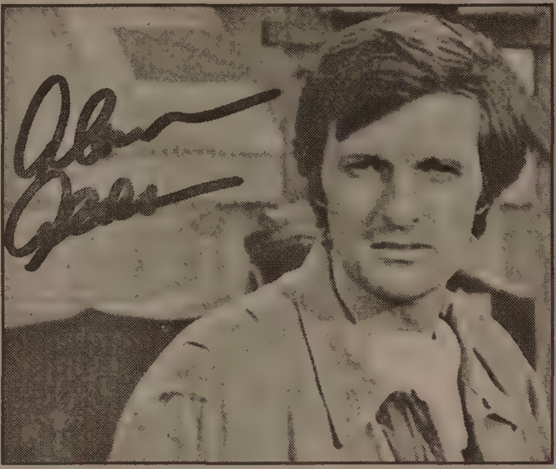
Georgica Pond's Steven Spielberg



Bridgehampton's Alda as Hawkeye Pierce

Seinfeld's TV show of the same name. The actor/comedian's property is actually 2 lots. The house was on one, he built the ball field on the other. But in East Hampton, a ball field is considered to be an accessory structure, but since there was not a structure, it had nothing to accessorize. In typical Seinfeld fashion, he came up with an obvious but hilarious solution: Build a small house on the second lot.

A few years ago Seinfeld took a terrible spin on Skimhampton Road, when the brakes failed on his 1967 Fiat BTM. He pulled the emergency brake, sharply turned the steering wheel and the Fiat rolled onto the roof before resting on the driver's side. Seinfeld went home uninjured.

Stephen Spielberg

Director/writer/producer Stephen Spielberg, who calls the Georgica Pond area of East Hampton home, takes his place on the throne of East End's film royalty. In fact, Spielberg's home, where he once had a T-Rex-styled weather vane on the roof. was one of the first jewels in the part of heaven called Hollywood East.

There isn't a genre Spielberg hasn't nailed, from Schindler's List and Saving Private Ryan—both of which earned him Academy awards for best director—to Jaws, E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial and Jurassic Park. These were the highest-grossing film made at the time. To date, the unadjusted gross of our local billionaire's films exceeds $8.5 billion worldwide.

Born in Cincinnati, Spielberg landed firmly on the map as a major Hollywood player with Jaws, the movie that makes every ripple in the ocean fill swimmers with terror. His next major success was Close Encounters of the Third Kind, followed by Raiders of the Lost Ark. Then it was back to outer space with E.T.—by many accounts, the greatest love story of them all.

With dozens of international awards from a career that spans almost six decades, Spielberg's love is still the movies. He's been known to indulge in "movie orgies," watching maybe a dozen films over a single weekend. In the summer, he makes it his business to see almost every major blockbuster in theaters, like East Hamptons UA theaters. Keep your eyes open.

Alan Alda

Born Alphonso Joseph D'Abruzzo, on January 28, 1936 in the Bronx, Alan Alda is one of the East End's most generous, laid back and humble citizens. "I don't want to be a celebrity in my own town, just a neighbor," he told me during an interview last summer. As an accomplished writer/actor/director with a more that 50-year long award-winning career (six Golden Globe, seven People's Choice and five Emmy awards, plus numerous Tony nominations), Alda has been a major supporter of East End culture and community. Many forget that the 11 acres upon which the Children's Museum of the East End was built were donated by Alda and his wife. "We helped," he said. "It feels good to see cars in the parking lot." There's a wing in the Hampton Library named for the couple, and Alda has lent his celebrity to fundraise for institutions like the Bay Street Theater.

Director/actor/writer Alda started his career in sketch comedy in the 1950s with Second City. His film career was put on the map in in the '60s, with Paper Lion, and later, Same Time, Next Year, The Seduction of Joe Tynan, The Four Seasons and Sweet Liberty (both of which he also wrote and directed). On stage, Alda earned a Tony nomination for his role in Glengarry Glen Ross. At the same time, he got involved in a TV series that helped change the sitcom genre forever. To many, his name is synonymous with Hawkeye Pierce, the self-deprecating, witty, on-the-make surgeon on the award-winning "MASH."

Alda was nominated for 21 Emmy awards for the show, and took home five. We'd like to think a few of those are proudly displayed in his Bridgehampton home.

val entrance and hand out fliers inviting some of these heavies. Next thing we're in distribution."

"I'm talking to the Festival about getting a third showing," he said.

"Please don't forget to get tickets for me and my wife to the second showing," I said.

"Okay."

"You know, I'm feeling sort of sad about this," Dennis said.

"What?"

"We've spent two years together doing this. And now it's over."

"It's not over. It's just beginning," I said.

"Getting it into theatres?" he said. "Nah, that's just business. I'm talking about the times we had. The girl on the beach with the snakes. The dog poop in the garage at Billy Joel's house. The crazy party where Kim Cattrall told you not to get married again. All the filming we did at Dan's Papers."

Originally the film was supposed to be a documentary about me and the newspaper. That's how Dennis had roped me in. During the two years of changes and more changes, that had slipped away.

"And you and your god damned mid-life crisis," I said. "That's what this was all about."

"So this was my baby, my first film," Dennis said. "Now I'm going on to my second. I'm working with John Roland. I'll be going to Ecuador, to Mexico for that film. We won't be doing this anymore."

"We can always take this film out and watch it again," I said. "It's not over."

"It's over," he said, "and it makes me feel empty. Did you fix that part in the golf game scene you wrote about that you put on the Internet?"

He was referring to my writing an article about the movie and a sentence or two he felt stepped over an invisible line—giving away a scene he had filmed. A role reversal. How the worm turns.

"Yeah," I said. "Look. I'll have the venue for the distributors and theatre owners at my house," I said. "On Sunday. Right in the middle of the festival. Give me a time, which does not interfere with the peewee football game you're coaching that day. I've got a library big enough for three rows of 10 chairs each."

He stared out the window.

"Your job will be to arrive half an hour early with 30 folding chairs," I continued. "I'll supply some refreshment. Can you do that?"

"Yeah," he said.

"And then after the festival, we're going to have to have showings of this at the Sag Harbor Theatre. Jerry Mallow, a friend of mine, owns it. They have 300 seats. Then EVERYBODY could see it. I'll introduce you to him. I'm sure he'll want to do this."

"You and your wife want to come over for dinner next Friday night?" Dennis asked. "We could see it again." He leaned over the table. He did looked very, very sad. "My baby is gone," he said.

"Let's drink to that," I said. I raised my bottle of Kirin.

"To babies gone. And to sushi."

TWENTY SOMETHING

Calm Down

I don't like to get political but I don't think I can respect myself without expressing what I've noticed recently.

I was in Starbucks in East Hampton the other day, standing online, when a man in front of me, exhibiting flagrantly effeminate mannerisms, ordered a latte. As he was ordering his drink, a middle-aged guy behind me stepped out of line, grabbed a bottle of water from a case, and when he returned, made eye contact with me and said, "freaking gays."

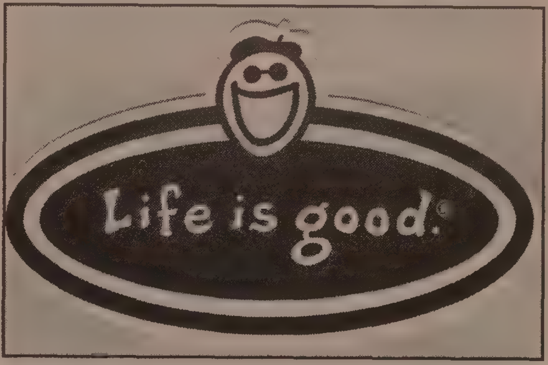
I felt like punching this guy in the mouth, but I didn't. I pretended not to hear.

I thought about the experience later and realized that more than any other time in my life, I'm experiencing this kind of thing. The same sort of scenario is exhibited toward Hispanics. There are many times in the last year or so when I've heard, very publicly and very loudly, an almost Hilter-like, rage against illegal immigrants, which seems to also rope in all Hispanic-Americans. Being in favor of border security is one thing, hating everything brown is another. I've read it on local blogs too, where commentors can hide behind their names because they know what they are saying is pure racist, but they say it anyway because it makes people feel good to put others down, feel good about power and is such an easy power fix for those too lazy to earn it any other way.

What is equally amazing about this kind of talk is that nobody seems interested in pointing out when something is just unbelievably, downright hateful. We all know where this kind of stuff leads, our history is right there for us to learn from, but there it is nevertheless.

Personally, I think it's okay to joke or comment about backgrounds. I'm half Jewish and part Irish and joke about that all the time. I have Italian-American friends who will make a joke about their background or mine, and I think that is healthy. But there is an "us versus them" thing happening that I just never sensed before and it is doing nothing but weakening our community. I think it has to do with the acceptance of national political smear tactics on both sides that has trickled down into what should be common sense thinking. We accept hateful, angry political rallies and rants as the norm now, with blatant lies on both the Democrat and Republican sides.

There are surely things that shouldn't even be debated, that are just a matter of fact. Global warming is a fact. That there are stars in the sky is a fact. Yet the fierce political climate and the discovery of miserably juvenile campaign tactics that work with the effectiveness of old fashioned propaganda has people thinking it's okay to have resurrect "us versus them."



Life is good.

The other day I drove by a car with a bumper sticker that read, "All Muslims Are Terrorists" and the guy had an American flag flying from his antenna.

It's like...No. That's not what America stands for dude, come on, shame on you!

I don't know, I guess what I'm saying is, let's try to be good to each other a little more. We are all in the same country and community and we all deeply, deeply care about this place and what it means and what it does for us. If we allow ourselves to become divided in our own country, we become weaker not stronger.

Tolerance and understanding have been the pure genius of America, and they still are. Some of us are forgetting that, and we shouldn't.

Rossellini as a lusting salmon in "Seduce Me"...

covered" by photographer Bruce Weber, who shot her and landed her a British Vogue cover. It was seen by Conde Nast editorial director Alex Liberman, who sent the young model to Richard Avedon. Eventually Rossellini was photographed by all the greats, including Steven Meisel, Helmut Newton, Annie Leibovitz and Robert Mapplethorpe. Her image appeared on Marie Claire, Harper's Bazaar, Vanity Fair, ELLE and many others. Yet Rossellini's take on it is fatalistic rather than egotistic.

"I was given the gift of being born with a look that I could take advantage of," she said. "I'd travel and be invited out by politicians and scientists just because I was a beautiful woman, you know—no other credentials. It was incredible how many doors it opened."

One of those doors closed in the controversial incident in 1996, when Lancome fired Rossellini at the age of 42 because they considered her to be "too old." But by that time her acting career was underway—again, something Rossellini never really planned for.

"I didn't want to be an actress. That came in my late 30s," she said. "When I was young I resisted it because I was Ingrid Bergman's daughter. It wasn't a rejection of my mother in any way, I just felt that I'd immediately be compared to her, that I wouldn't be given the time to learn."

Recalling her life growing up in Rome and Paris as the daughter of a highly successful actress and accomplished director, Rossellini added, "It was a great childhood. My parents were fantastic. I did feel I eventually wanted to be in the film business, but my intention was to be a costume designer."

That was not to be. After working in the United States for a few years as a model, Rossellini married the venerable director Martin Scorsese (1979–1982). A year after that marriage ended, she married then-model/now Microsoft exec Jon Wiedemann (1983–1986), and had a daughter, Elettra. Very shortly after that she was engaged to director David Lynch (1986 to 1990) and starred in Blue Velvet. Since then (1986), Rossellini has had appearances, large and small, in dozens of films and television shows. She has published three books, the self-described fictional memoir, Some of Me (1997), Looking at Me in 2002, and in 2006, In the Name of the Father, the Daughter and the Holy Spirits: Remembering Roberto Rossellini. That work was accompanied by her short film My Dad Is 100 Years Old. Rossellini played almost every role in the film including David Selznick, Alfred Hitchcock, and her mother Ingrid Bergman. The showing of My Dad at Sundance led to Seduce Me, the topic of the HIFF's Conversations with. It won't be her first visit here. In the very early years of the festival, Rossellini discussed film restoration, as the keeper of her parents' archive which she considers a passion and a responsibility. She is a major benefactor of the Bellport-Brookhaven Historical Society and has been a supporter of the Central Park Conservancy. In Bellport, where she lives with her son who is a student at the Ross School in East Hampton, she raises puppies for the Guide Dog Foundation for the Blind.

...and as the woman being seduced

Rossellini goals for the future include making her own full-length film, acting, working with animals and staying active in preservation. (Despite her fatalistic attitude on ephemeral beauty and the life cycle, at 60, Rossellini is pretty well preserved herself.) With so many eclectic interests, there's no telling what she might come up with next. Her only commitment was this: "I like to pursue what's interesting to me."

"Along with the New York Subway System, Hampton's Subway is the only underground transit system in the State of New York."

DOWN IN THE TUBE

Julian Schnabel, Woody Allen and Harvey Weinstein were laughing it up on the Express line between Amagansett and East Hampton Tuesday night, apparently getting their shtick ready for the film festival. Filmmaker Dennis Lynch was filming them from across the aisle.

ANNUAL GIVEAWAY

Once a year, the subway system gives away all the stuff that people accidentally drop onto the platforms that then rolls down onto the tracks. Most people know about the third rail. And those who don't heed the big warning signs on every platform alerting them to the fact that they could be fried to a crisp if they went down on the tracks.

As a result, the once a week cleanup of the tracks by our stalwart maintenance crew during the wee hours of the morning when everything including the electricity is turned off yields many gems. All year, these gems are collected and piled up in a storeroom in our headquarters building in Hampton Bays for the once a year give-away on the second Monday in October, first come first serve.

This year's offerings include many sets of melted car keys, flattened pennies, nickels and quarters, wallets and appointment books. There are often also notes. One such note reads "Karen McLaughlin, I love you even though I am married to your sister. Bob. Burn this."

There are also lipsticks, prescription bottles, condoms, Big Mac wrappers, Coke cans, diamond rings, earrings, cell phones, homework, chewing gum (both stuck to the tracks and loose) dog poop and a whole lot of other interesting stuff. Doors open at 9 a.m.

MASSAGE SERVICE OPENS

Walk By Karen, the new massage service, opens on all platforms on Hampton Subway next Sunday. It will be open from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m., seven days a week.

Is your spine out of alignment? Do you suffer from slipped or bulging disks? Muscle cramps? Blood clots? A rash?

These and other ills can be cured simply by lying down on your belly on the red and blue mats of the Walk By Karen company, the firm who's work is sweeping the nation, for a brief 30-second walk-around on your back by somebody named Karen, or by somebody who says they are Karen.

"We have mats on subway platforms on subway systems in Moscow and Minsk and Vladivostok, Tokyo and Buenos Aires and Cairo and numerous other places," says Karen. "And we are happy to welcome you to our first service in America."

Many straphangers have discovered this service abroad by tripping over it. Or tripping over somebody lying on it. They come back again and again. All because it works. All pain in the back ends when Karen of the big feet walks on the back.

"Some of our best customers," says one of the Karens, "are those who can't remember why they got on the subway. They've gone around and around the system for hours and sometimes days, and they are tired. Finally, they get off, and there we are, a shining oasis."

The Karens are highly trained. All have been walked upon for at least five hours by the original Karen as part of their training.

And the 30-second walk hardly holds you up at all. You're in, you're down, you're up and you're out. And the cost, $10 for 30 seconds, is modest and well worth it. Don't forget to "Walk by Karen."

We hope you enjoy this new service.

existing programs and the addition of new programs driven by the community's needs and interests. Our daily programming will be built on the foundation of familiar segments presented each day or weekly by our local program hosts: Bonnie Grice, Brian Cosgrove, Lee Davis, Ed German, Ann Ligouri, Michael Mackey and Tracie Hotchner.

We'll continue to provide hourly broadcasts of local and international news from the NPR and the BBC, as well as the only radio broadcast of the "PBS Newshour," our local version of "Morning Edition with Michael Mackey," our daily broadcast of "National Native," and our daily business news program, "Marketplace."

As soon as resources permit, we'll restore and refresh our winning local news and public affairs programs to provide essential information and perspective on issues and life in our community.

We'll continue to present national programs from NPR, independent producers, and other national networks that are relevant to our local community. These include "The Tavis Smiley Show," a news and opinion show focusing on issues and celebration of the Black community in America, and "The Swingin' Years," a retrospective of the Big Band era that recalls the music and events that shaped America during the period 1935-1955.

As an independent, locally owned public radio station, we'll develop and present programs that allow our listeners to participate in democracy. The community will have opportunities to discuss and debate local concerns about environmental, immigration and racial issues as well local political and business topics.

Of course, local election coverage will be part of our programming, as will forums and debates on matters that are important to this community. To ensure that the East End is aware of and included in the regional debates that affect our community, we'll pay attention to broad issues of concern to all of Long Island. Our goal is to better inform citizens by providing a space where ideas can be exchanged.

88.3 FM has long been known for playing great music, and we'll continue to be the curators of music that offers listeners a connection to the world and a respite from it. We'll seek out local artists and play their music on-air and broadcast live concerts and events from across the community.

In addition to being a forum for the obvious art form, music, 88.3 FM will introduce the community to artists and aspects of the arts that aren't headliners. In "Teen Tours of the Arts," our collaborative program with the Parrish Art Museum and Southampton High School, we offered opportunities for young people to learn about and participate in the arts. We hope to build on this initiative, especially important at a time when many schools are forced to cut back on arts and music education.

We'll continue to connect our listeners with the arts and artists that make our community vibrant. Through programs like "The Song Is You with Bonnie Grice," we will invite listeners to enter into conversations with local and visiting authors, musicians and all round fascinating people. We'll go behind the scenes at a local theater, learn how a painter was inspired or how people's lives have been shaped by music that has moved them.

88.3 brings the arts to our listeners and encourages listeners to become more actively involved with local arts and cultural organizations and the business and political life of the community. We expand access to arts with live broadcasts of the Metropolitan Opera and the New York Philharmonic, for example. This provides a service to opera fans and brings the arts to people who can't attend the live performances because of finances or logistics.

Finally, we will expand our public service by engaging more people across more media platforms—the Internet and in multi-channel HD radio. Ultimately we believe that the new media technologies are more than extended programming outlets. Used creatively, they'll enable 88.3 to advance and extend its role as a community educator, and to promote and facilitate active engagement in public life.

Our future will be one of change, but it will be rooted solidly in the core values that have made us strong: a commitment to localism, education, the arts, intellectual curiosity, inclusiveness, insightfully presented content, engagement—and inspiration.

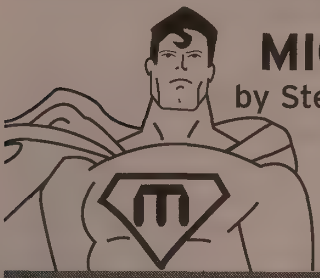
CAPTAIN MICROCHIP



by Steven A. Ludsin

The advent of the iPad Tablet reminded me of the classic scene in History of the World Part I with Mel Brooks. He played Moses receiving the 15 commandments. Excited, he heads down the mountain and accidentally drops one and it shatters. That is the beginning of the 10 commandments.

At the present time, the iPad Tablet is generating more tablets. Samsung, HP and RIM are planning and releasing their versions. The RIM PlayBook was announced this week. It is meant to complement the Blackberry which is manufactured by RIM (as in Research in Motion). Rather than have its own internal cell connection the RIM PlayBook will have a Wi-Fi connection and a Bluetooth connection that can communicate with your Blackberry. This raises issues of battery life on the Blackberry cell phone you use, but at least you don't need another contract. I was dazzled by the iPad but I have been using Blackberries for so many years that the PlayBook might work better for me.

If the contacts database and documents to go features are easily transmitted between the Playbook and the Blackberry that feature would require less adjustments during the transition. The price and release date are still unknown but we know the PlayBook is seven inches wide, somewhat smaller than the iPad's 9.7-inch screen. The PlayBook will use a new operating system and can display Web pages created using Adobe's Flash software, a capability not found on the iPad. The Playbook supports HTML 5 and Flash 10.1, has 1080P HD Video, HDMI Output, front and rear facing camera and a 1 GHz dual processor. It is a sleek .4-inch thick, .9 pound tablet.

The visual display of the PlayBook has a sharp resolution similar to that of an iPad. It has multi-tasking capability. RIM expects to ship the device to corporate customers and developers this month and to consumers starting early in 2011, so it will miss a sales window in the holiday buying season. Its price has not been made public yet.

In the meantime, many competing tablets are hitting the market. Inc. will launch its seven-inch tablet in the next few weeks and a 10-inch tablet within six to 12 months. Dell's Streak is a tablet computer that operates on Google's Android platform and is also aimed at competing with Apple's iPad. Dell will launch "a whole slew" of new products in the next six to 12 months, including additional three-inch, four-inch and 10-inch devices. Some of theses new products will also run Corp.'s Windows operating system.

Dell began selling a five-inch tablet in the U.S. this year. Although the tablets offer new features and portability, I guess many of us can still rely on our laptops. There are great bragging rights being an early user of these tablets and to many people that's worth the price.

hat on the Water Mill platform and last week, after getting thrown out of the Water Mill station because nearly 500 screaming fans blocked the platform, performed before a sold-out crowd in Yankee Stadium. Now the fans want to erect a statue of her by the token booth in the Water Mill station.

Schwinn has indeed been a phenomenon and it is possible to say it was the ruckus she caused at Water Mill that propelled her to rock stardom, with, I am told, five hits on the charts during the same week, which was last week.

Since that time, Schwinn, who is just 19, has seen her star soar to great heights and then sink to the deepest depths. She got arrested for drugs, did a porno, married Justin Timberlake, divorced Justin Timberlake, went into rehab, hit a pedestrian driving away, wore an ankle bracelet, had a baby, hosted "Saturday Night Live," got a tattoo on her butt and is currently awaiting trial for plagiarism and forgery and the week is not even over. Her new book, Flameout debuted Monday and is #1 on The New York Times Best Seller List.

But the answer is no. No statue.

Summer of Plane Crashes, But Nobody Dies

By David Lion Rattiner

The Montauk Airport had another plane crash two weeks ago. A single-engine plane piloted by Tim O'Connor of Somers, Conn., hit a gust of wind while landing on the runway and was blown off course. The plane, which was damaged, ended up on the thick grass on the side of the runway. Nobody was injured, including the two passengers on board, and nobody required any medical attention other then being a little shaken up.

The wind was blowing strongly, but safely across the runway. But at the time of the landing, it gusted unexpectedly, causing the plane to veer off course uncontrollably. Because the Montauk airport only has one runway, pilots have only one course that they can take while landing and taking off, even if the wind conditions are not in the favor of the pilot or the aircraft. The crashed airplane had to be picked up by a crane and hauled off.

It has not been a pleasant year for the Montauk airport, who, through no fault of any of the employees there, has suffered four separate airplane crashes, the last two took place in a span of less than two weeks apart. "It's certainly kind of strange, but it doesn't have anything to do with the airport, each crash had to do with the pilot not doing what they were supposed to do and in this case, a gust of wind that really was nobody's fault, unless you can blame God," said one Montauk resident. "This year though, it was noticeable how many crashes there were."

In August there was a plane crash due to pilot error, where a plane smashed into a chain link fence that had just recently been built.Rudy Weisse, the assistant airport manager commented that if it wasn't for that recently built fence, that crash could have been much worse. In April, another plane overshot the runway and crash landed due to pilot error and another plane crash landed into a wooden fence before ending up in the middle of East Lake Drive.

he had a bit part in a Roland Joffe's movie called The Killing Fields. Swimming to Cambodia won for him a National Book Award and a Guggenheim designed so he could make more. Also Swimming to Cambodia was made into a movie which was entirely of him sitting at a table with a glass of water, a paper and pencil and talking to you. Just see it to see what he could do.

During the years that followed, Gray performed his monologues around the country, wrote new ones, and had roles in film and on Broadway mostly as a character actor. His filmography lists 42 films.

Around 1990, Gray and his new wife Kathy Russo took up residence in Sag Harbor, buying a home right downtown with a white picket fence around it. They had two sons and a daughter and were an important part of this community. In 2001, in Ireland, Gray was seriously injured in a car crash. Bits of metal lodged in his forehead, some apparently in his brain. He became morose, then paranoid, then suicidal. He never recovered and in January of 2004 killed himself by jumping off the Staten Island ferry into the icy waters of New York harbor. He was 62.

Several attempts have been made to round up and complete Gray's life's work, which he left behind on his desk unfinished. A monologue he was working on, called Life Interrupted was published in book form in 2005. Actors read from this work and bits of film and videotape were strung together by his widow in a moving tribute to Gray that appeared at Bay Street Theatre and other places called Stories Left to Tell.

Now the academy award-winning director Steven Soderbergh (Erin Brockovich, Sex Lies and Videotape, Ocean's Eleven) has made a documentary about Gray. Titled And Everything is Going Fine, it will be shown at the Hamptons International Film Festival on Friday, October 8 at 6:45 p.m. and on Mon., Oct. 11 at 2 p.m.

Looking Forward to Casino Prosperity

By T.J. Clemente

The drum beat of progress for the Shinnecock Nation, a tribe the Town of Southampton founders negotiated with in 1640, is truly picking up steam with the "Official Recognition" by the United States Government granted on October 1. (See Breaking News, page 16.)

So now the opportunity to claim the potential income of casino gaming for the tribe is that much closer. In a recent presentation before Long Island real estate agents, the Shinnecocks said that they are looking at potential locations in the hopes of being able to create as many as three casinos. Shinnecock Gaming Authority member Phil Brown said it would be most prudent to create one casino close to New York City (perhaps in Nassau County), another large casino, capable of providing high end entertainment as well as gaming in western Suffolk, and lastly a "Monte Carlo" type casino (bingo and slot machines) "near our homelands in Southampton."

The rise in income for casinos since Ronald Reagan signed the 1988 Indian Gaming Act (which upheld tribal sovereignty to create casinos, immune from individual state regulation) is astounding. In 2001, Native American casino income in the United States was $12.8 billion, jumping to $22.5 billion in 2005. By 2009, with the economic downturn and other financial crises, tribal-owned casinos still took in $26.8 billion. The 65 tribal casinos in California alone took in $7.3 billion in 2007—27% of the total revenue from casinos in the U.S.

In the recent presentation, Brown said that casinos will contribute to financial recovery on Long Island, which could become "the greatest gaming market in the world" because of its proximity to New York City.

The Shinnecocks are hoping to get gaming facilities in place within a five-year time frame. Members of their gaming authority are going to Washington to meet with Congressmen who might be able to craft legislation to streamline the red tape opponents may try to use to block the establishment of Shinnecock casinos on properties outside the reservation.

One of the key people involved in the project with the Shinnecocks is Mariam Illitch (Gateway Casino Resorts LLC), whose husband Mike founded Little Caesars Pizza, and now owns the Detroit Tigers baseball team and the Detroit Red Wings hockey team. Illitch has supported the Shinnecocks in the process of getting the federal recognition. She also helped the Los Coyotes Band of Cahuilla and the Cuperio Indians develop casinos in Barstow, California.

Tribal elders are not planning to build anything on their 79-acre reservation in Hampton Bays (Westwood property); however, government officials, noting the weight of federal recognition, now say that anything is possible. In fact some officials said that if all other options become too difficult, they will examine locations on the Shinnecocks 800-acre reservation in Southampton.

However, Brown said, "We have not chosen a site yet," noting they are exploring all possibilities.

Shinnecock Gaming Authority member Joan Crippen said that the Shinnecocks are "people of our word," and think there are better locations for casinos than on the reservation. The outcome of it all could very well be that members of the Shinnecock Nation, who for years have been living near the poverty level, may soon have a tribe that is very wealthy indeed.

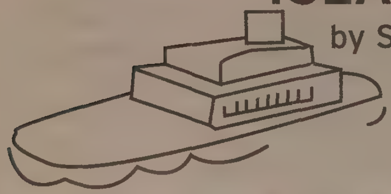
THE SHELTERED ISLANDER



by Sally Flynn

Greenport Maritime Festival

"I'm exhausted, John, but every piece of brass on the boat is shining. The new boat cushions look terrific and the new canvas will be here in time for the Maritime Celebration on the 25th. I love having a classic boat, but geez, the work...what are you wearing? I threw that out last spring."

"No, you TRIED to throw it out last spring, Louise."

"You pulled that out of the burn barrel! John, please...you've had that shirt since you were 22. You're 47 now, it pulls everywhere and it's too short. Your hairy stomach shows."

"It fits fine! It's my lucky shirt. I caught my prize bass in this shirt. Remember that competition?"

"No, John, don't start the bass competition story, please, I have to have time to organize Thanksgiving next month."

"You had no right to throw out my lucky shirt, or my lucky shorts."

"No—John—you didn't fish out those shorts too! You can't wear those OP short shorts Honey, I mean you really can't."

"I can still button them. I just skip the top button and hide it with my shirt."

"No, my love, you can not wear those short shorts in public anymore, ever."

"Worried about me? I'm a happily married man, I wouldn't flirt. You don't have to worry about somebody making a play for me in these shorts."

"That's truer than you know, but not for the reasons you think. John, have you ever seen the pictures of the ballroom in St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York?"

"Can't say I have—wait a minute...there's no ballroom in St Patrick's Cathedral!"

"No dear, there isn't. And that's what your short shorts have in common with the Cathedral."

"That's low, Louise."

"Many things are these days, John."

"That bad? Really?"

"Remember when your Uncle George visited? Remember those green polyester shorts he loved because they were comfortable? Aunt Betty couldn't get rid of them no matter what she did."

"I remember, he looked like somebody put pants on a goat. Please don't tell me I look that bad in my shorts."

"Well, Uncle George's shorts were at least Bermuda length, so there was no chance of anything escaping. The OP shorts are way too short. I get scared every time you put them on."

"I love these shorts. I've had them so long. It's like giving up a friend."

"We can frame them."

"No, that's stupid. We'll bury them at sea during the festival. It's the only proper way to dispose of boat shorts that have served so long."

"And the shirt."

"Shirt stays. Be happy I'm letting go of my lucky competition shorts."

"Alright, one out of two ain't bad. Give them to me, I'll throw them in the duffel. John, let go of the shorts, c'mon, give them to me now. You look silly clutching them to your chest like I'm taking away a toy."

"Please, Louise, we just need a moment."

"Okay. Well, when you're ready, here are some new dockers. You'll look nice in these for the festival."

"They're the wrong size. Louise. The waist says 42, I'm a 36 waist. My OP's are 36."

"They're made in Malaysia. The waist is 42 centimeters, it's 36 inches in American sizes."

"I thought so. I mean, 42 is just five points below my age."

"And five points above your I.Q.."

"Huh?"

"I said Hy Que. They were made in Hy Que, Malaysia."

"Yeah, well, they better get their sizes right if they want to sell over here."

Strawberry Fields Forever

This story appears in the book Dan's Stories, published by Dan's Papers in 1972.

By Dan Rattiner

The Mercedes hummed along the Montauk Highway, passing the Town Green of Water Mill and heading east in the direction of Mecox.

"Look!" shouted the girl from behind her sunglasses. "Look at that sign."

The fat man looked up from the road construction he was dodging and could hardly miss seeing the big, red-lettered sign:

PICK YOUR OWN
STRAWBERRIES

"Let's stop and pick strawberries," the girl said. "It would be great fun."

"Pick strawberries? I thought you DUG strawberries. Out of the ground."

In any case, he pulled the Mercedes off the road, and with a rather puzzled expression, drove into the parking lot adjacent to a farm stand with the name Green Thumb.

"This is ridiculous," the man said.

"No, it is not," the girl replied firmly, as she got out of the car.

The couple walked into the open stand and up to the counter, where a crowd of perhaps 10 people was waiting to get waited on. Children ran this way and that, carrying boxes of strawberries, a long-haired teenager with a headband was weighing a bunch of lettuce heads, then writing on a bag with a black crayon. Finally, a pert, older woman came to them and asked what they wanted.

"We want to pick strawberries," the girl said.

"Well, go ahead," the woman relied.

The man jingled money in his pocket. "Just like that? Do you have an instruction sheet? A list of rules and regulations? Any warning?"

"No."

"Well, do you want to get paid?"

"No. Pay when you get back."

The woman led them to a doorway opening into a seven-acre field, all planted in strawberry bushes one or two feet high. There was a sign reading "40 cents A QUART BOX." And a big carton filled with little wooden containers by the side of the path. She reached in, handed each of them a wooden box and pushed them gently, much like a mother bird might push her babies out of the nest.

"Well, here we are," the man said, staring off into the middle distance. As far as he could see the place was planted in strawberries, a variety of fashionable people bent over in various types of squats, sweating and straining at the unusual labor in the hot sun. A young man walked by carrying a rake.

"How long will this take?" the man asked. "To fill this bucket?"

"Leonard, will you come on?" the girl replied.

"About 10 minutes," the young man said, sizing him up.

"There's no poison ivy or anything, is there?" The girl dragged him by the arm. "You have insurance here, don't you?"

The couple walked down a dirt path until they were about 100 yards from the farm stand. It was a strange sensation for the man. There he stood in summer clothes in the middle of a farmer's field, surrounded by berry pickers. It was a long leap from the Graybar Building, even a long leap from his house on the beach.

"Well, come on," the girl called. "You won't get any standing there." She was already on her haunches, in a patch off to his right.

"I usually PAY people to do this kind of thing," the man sniffed. But then he was down on his haunches, and looking at the tops of the umbrella leaves of the strawberry plants. There was a little red strawberry underneath one. He'd have to touch it.

Slowly he reached down toward the leaf, determined to touch it with his bare hands. He imagined the chemicals that might transfer to his skin from the plant leaf, chemicals that could cause a rash and keep him out of his office for several days. He imagined the bugs that might be there, some of which might carry dreadful diseases. He might die.

But he touched it. And it moved. A pleasant sensation.

Ten minutes later, the man named Leonard considered himself the best and fastest strawberry picker on the east coast. He moved the plants around vigorously, searching for the elusive berries, pulling them between index and middle finger, moving along in a squat-like walk to the next plant. Occasionally a young boy or an older woman would pick their way over toward his row and he would look up and scowl until they picked their way off in another direction. He'd instinctively known what to pick and what not to pick. Red was good, green was bad. That he knew. He watched for abrasions or worm holes and generally tossed those bad ones to one side with a sense of guilt. After all, why should he be selective? What made him so special? It was only 40 cents. But then he'd see other strawberries, picked and unripe, thrown to one side or another, rejected by lesser mortals than he, and he felt better. Until he would accidentally step on one end and go squish. And then he'd feel bad and wasteful again.

Eventually his basket was filled. There was no possible way he could add more to it without losing a berry for every one that he put on. It was over. Like a ride on a roller coaster, his little fantasy had come to an end. And he couldn't get up. He was stuck in the squatting position.

"It's been a long time," the girl was saying, standing over him with her arm extended.

"I'm stuck. I can't get up. And you have strawberries all over your face."

"It's a bad bargain if you don't eat more than you pick."

He took her hand and painfully lifted himself to his feet. It was most comfortable if he stooped a little.

"Maybe they X-ray you," he said.

"I'll drive if you want me to," she said, referring to his stoop.

"Never mind."

Warm and sunburned, they walked back down the dirt path toward the farm stand, holding their baskets in front of them like beggars with tin cups. The man took one particular strawberry he'd been saving off the top of his basket and held it up as he walked.

"Look at this," he said. "A perfect strawberry."

The girl ate it. The man scowled.

Back at the farm stand Leonard reached into his pocket and handed four quarters over to the young man with the long hair. Then he noticed that the girl had a fistful of daisies in her left hand. "How much for the daisies?" he asked.

"The daisies are free. We only charge for strawberries."

They walked back out to the Mercedes, black and shining in the afternoon sun, and the man made some financial calculations. They'd paid 40 cents to pick their own baskets. Yet baskets already picked were for sale for 60 cents. That meant that he had made 20 cents for 10 minutes as a strawberry picker, he figured out what that was for an hour, compared it t what he made at Merrill Lynch, considered a great many variables, and then turned the key in the ignition.

HAVE YOU LOST OR ARE YOU LOSING YOUR TEETH?
If so, you may be a candidate for Dental Implants. The Popper Dental Team, a family of Specialists in Periodontics, Prosthodontics, Endodontics, Cosmetic and Implant Dentistry, has placed thousands of Implants since 1985.

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR EXPERIENCE.

Dear Drs. Popper and Staff-
Thank you for all your kindness and caring before and after the procedures I had to go through for my mouth. At last I feel like I can eat and smile without having to worry about my teeth. One day, I have the surgery and the next day my teeth are in place. The saying is "no pain no gain." In this case, there was no pain but a great deal of gain. You are a blessing for anyone like me who deserves to have pride in his or her appearance.
Forever grateful,

Make Movies Here! Save $$, Use the Studio!

By Susan M. Galardi

While progress has been slow and steady, the effort to establish the Hamptons as a film and production-friendly place for those in the media has gained momentum recently. Suffolk County Executive Steve Levy has submitted legislation that would make Suffolk more accommodating to directors, producers and photographers. One of Levy's recommendations would streamline the process of acquiring permits to film in the county by creating a single application that would be filed with Suffolk County, granting permission to film on any county, town or village-owned properties.

Another initiative resulted in The Suffolk County Film Commission providing $25,000 in grants to low-budget, independent filmmakers. "The Next Exposure: Suffolk County Low Budget Independent Film Post Production/Completion Grant," administered by the Tribeca Film Institute, will make available two grants of $10,000 each and one grant of $5,000 for filmmakers whose primary residence or production companies are in Suffolk, and who have shot at least 80% of principal photography within the County.

Best of all, earlier this year a 30% Filming Tax Credit has been approved. Suffolk County's Department of Economic Development and Workforce Housing will help production companies obtain the Tax Credit, which provides from 10% to 30% of refundable tax credits. Last Wednesday, just before the start of the Hamptons International Film Festival, Levy held a meeting at the Bay Street Theater to explain the new tax credit.

Paperman, with Jeff Bridges, was partially produced at the Studio

East Hampton Studio, located in a state-of-the-art complex at 77 Industrial Road in Wainscott, is a New York State 30% tax approved facility. In fact, EHS is one of the few facilities that qualify for this incentive. At 18,000 square feet, the EHS soundstage is one of the largest indoor facilities in Suffolk County. EHS does film and television production, photo shoots, recording and recently concerts. The facility has accommodated television commercial shoots for AT&T, photo shoots for Bobby Flay, and served as a recording studio for Jimmy Buffet. EHS is also opening a satellite office for Grant Wilfley Casting to help support the local need for extras and talent.

This weekend, EHS will host the Saturday night Filmmakers party for Hamptons International Film Festival, featuring live music, professional photo shoot, casting agents, set designers, open bar and food (for information, go to HIFF.org).

EHS's Michael Wudyka has recently been appointed to the Suffolk County Film Commission and is working to raise awareness of the East End as a viable spot for film productions. Recently, The East Hampton Media Advisory Committee was formed with the support of the Town Board. As chairman of the committee, Wudyka said he is committed to bringing all forms of media to what has become a film-friendly location.

I Can Come to Your House and Shoot Deer

By T.J. Clemente

Recently Suffolk County resident and licensed "Bow Hunter" John Levitt took a print ad in a local publication in the Hamptons requesting permission to harvest deer on private property using his compound 60-pound Precision Hunting Bow, with sites. Levitt offered payment to the property owner who granted this permission. The reason for the ad was that the private property in Southampton Town where John hunted for 20 years with permission was sold and turned into a preserve. A CEO of an up-island financial services company, Levitt placed the ad because he disapproves of bow hunters who hunt on private lands without permission. In an interview, he expressed his love of bow hunting, citing the beauty of the bonding with friends and family, and calling it "a truly American tradition." Levitt noted that people from all "walks of life" bow hunt and are required in New York State to take a bow hunting safety course and a hunters safety course before being eligible for the DEC license to bow hunt. Levitt does harvest the deer for its meat, and should the buck be a prize due to its antler size, the head may be mounted also.

The official season for deer hunting with a bow and arrow in New York State is from October 1 to December 31. Each hunter is allowed one doe harvest and one buck harvest. Levitt said that training stresses the importance of taking "a good proper shot" to swiftly kill the deer. It is a side shot through the heart and lung area that, using a special "broad head," arrow, goes clean through and out the animal's body.

The arrowhead actually has multiple mechanical razor heads that open upon impact. The proper shot is to be taken from 20 yards away or less. Levitt said that bow hunters never take shots that will not down the deer, and called it horrific for any hunter to not take the "good shot." He said it is extremely rare that a deer runs off with an arrow in it because the arrows go "cleanly through," however if it should happen, all of the other hunters take every measure to down the deer and harvest it.

Levitt stressed that he has gone three years without taking a shot because in that time, he didn't have the opportunity for the "good clean shot," to get the "clean kill." He cited the dangers of the extremely high deer population in Suffolk County and quite frankly anyone who lives out here knows of someone who has hit and killed a deer with his car, causing damage to the car and sometimes injury to the passengers. Levitt said that his ad in the paper was a success. He has a new site in the Town of Southampton on 10 acres of private land now secured. "I am a father of four, a CEO and a responsible law abiding citizen," he said. "I would never hunt without permission, and I enjoy the added safety of having permission. I sign away all liability to any accident on the property."

People who hunt without permission are still the responsibility of the landowner. The reason Levitt used a private property to hunt is because, he said, there are no real places to hunt in Suffolk County. Some interesting facts Levitt pointed out to me include no home owner or property owner can legally kill any deer on his property without a DEC hunting license, and only the limit of one buck and one doe if he does. He also said that using a rifle to shot deer is prohibited in Suffolk County. That the shots one hears in the woods during hunting season are "shotguns," shooting ducks. He recommends others to take out an advertisement like he put in the paper to find a safe legal site to harvest deer with bows. He regrets that there "are hundreds of guys, out there, wearing camouflaged clothing prowling around without permission on private property, the land owners never see them but they are there, I am against that." Since hunting is a sport, good sportsmanship is imperative to John Levitt. He said that all hunters from all walks of life understand the code and respect each other in a way that is "extremely bonding." Taking bad shots is frowned upon and peer pressure prohibits that as John calls it a"type of horrific behavior." He was pleased by the amount of responses to the ad and now has a list of other leads to check out. This last weekend while hunting with a friend and his son, his son harvested his first buck on the new location from the advertisement. John dressed the deer, harvesting the venison, and sent the

Vote for Dan's Best of the Best

It's October on the East End and that means it's time for Dan's Papers Best of the Best contest. When we first started the Best of the Best, voters had to show up at our office in Bridgehampton with the ballot ripped out of the paper and turn it in, or mail it in. Even then the turn out was pretty amazing. Now we have the Internet and all bets are off. Drive up and down the Main Road on the North Fork and you'll see banners and signs declaring Dan's Papers Best of the Best on half the local shops and businesses. There are service people driving around in vans with Dan's Papers Best of the Best emblazoned on the side. You'll even see the Dan's Papers Best of the Best logo in the advertisements our winners run in other papers.

The point is, while everyone knows this is a lot of fun, you also take it very seriously. So do we and with that in mind we have made every attempt to keep Dan's Papers Best of the Best contest running smoothly and fairly. This year we mixed it up a bit by asking everyone to nominate their favorites before we put them up for voting. This new process garnered hundreds and hundreds of votes for businesses and people all over the East End. At the end we picked those who got the most votes, 2,3,4 and sometimes 5 entries who all tied in the number of nominations they received. Now we ask you all to vote for the very Best of the Best.

If your favorites didn't make the list this year we hope you'll still participate and make sure you get the word out in 2011! As the title suggest these are the Best of the Best and we'd love to run the full list of everyone nominated—be it by one vote or 100—but time and space won't allow. However, it seems to us here at Dan's Papers that every business, and every worker out here has at least one die hard fan who took the time to sign onto our website and vote for them. Honestly, the lists were overwhelming.

So it's down to the top few in each category and the choices are set up by theme: Food/Dining, Retail, Health & Beauty, Travel and Leisure, Entertainment and Miscellaneous. We have the general Dan's Papers section and separate North Fork and Montauk sections too. This year you will notice that some North Fork and Montauk establishments made it into the main Dan's Papers section, that's just fine—we don't limit the voters. But make sure you look at each contest. We don't want you missing out on your choice for Best of the Best. When it comes down to it this is really your contest.

Facebook

Unlike real life, users can control what people think about them, what they want them to think about them, and how they are perceived. A status update saying, "Excited for the gym today," is a statement designed to let friends (and potential mates) know that they workout. The pictures they use online are only the best pictures of themselves.

And there is another little wrinkle. The site is used by police officers who are investigating a potential suspect, and if a status update says, "feeling guilty about robbing that bank," they can use that in court. This actually, almost comically, comes as a surprise to most criminals, who somehow believed that their privacy online was protected. It isn't.

Possibly the saddest part about Facebook is the new form of bullying called cyber bullying. Recently a gay student in Texas committed suicide after an intimate act with another student was videoed and put up on Facebook, permanently humiliating him. Death seemed like his only way out.

Oddly, the strangest thing about cyber bullying is that it's extremely easy to solve by simply not signing up for the social networks online that give people the ability to bully you. Parents watch in horror as they stare at the Facebook pages of their children, viewing wall posts of others that are teasing them without mercy, all of which can be looked up, years, even decades later. Is there a way to stop this? Yes there is. Don't use the website anymore.

Deer

head to a taxidermist for a mounting. Hunting has been and will always remain a large part of American life, but John stresses should he down a deer, he harvests the meat, and it gets eaten, he doesn't kill just for sport. He says that shows no respect for the deer or the sport.

OVER THE BARREL

Local Wines With Peconic Bay Scallops

This cool stretch of weather has me craving red wines over whites, but Peconic Bay scallops — those sweet, succulent little nuggets of deliciousness — will be in season soon. That means local sauvignon blanc in my house.

Chardonnay remains the most-planted white variety on Long Island, but the future (and maybe even present-day) white wine star is sauvignon blanc, which seems to excel in our climate. The only thing holding it back is limited plantings — there just isn't enough fruit for all of the wineries that would like to make it.

The best local renditions defy comparison to other styles of sauvignon blanc in the world. They are fruit-forward, but not overtly so like many California sauvignon blancs. They have a minerally vein, but not to the extent of Sancerre. And they bring some of that grassy-herbal character, but not to the extent of New Zealand renditions.

Here are a few of my personal favorites, but there are others to discover too:

Jamesport Vineyards 2009 Sauvignon Blanc ($24) is extremely tropical on the nose — mango, green papaya, pineapple — with hints of kiwi, grapefruit and green fig. Medium-to-full bodied, the palate balances ripe richness with fresh acidity. Pineapple and mangoes lead the way, framed by that acidity and layered with melon, fig, understated herb notes and just a little flinty minerality. The finish shows nice length with a little kiwi-melon that finishes clean with zesty citrus.

Paumanok Vineyards 2009 Sauvignon Blanc ($24) is also tropical — typical of the sauvignon blanc musque clone — with aromas of papaya, passion fruit, peach and mandarin orange with just a subtle grassy note beneath that fruit cocktail. Ripe and similarly tropical, the mouth-filling, almost opulently fruit-driven palate shows good acidity that creates tension on the mid-palate and cuts through all that fruit. The long, balanced finish brings a distinct mango note with a bit of grapefruit zest.

Raphael 2009 First Label Sauvignon Blanc ($22) has aromas of lemon, grapefruit, sweet herbs and fennel. Medium-bodied and intensely grapefruity, the palate is laced with a heavy dose of sweet herbs and subtle tropical fruit papaya notes. Fresh, juicy acidity keeps it lively and the finish is medium-long and saline.

Macari Vineyards 2009 Katherine's Field Sauvignon Blanc ($23) is a bit lighter on the nose compared to some other local sauvignon, but is still fresh, grassy and citrusy — particularly showing white grapefruit and a little lime.

Lithe and showing more grass-over-grapefruit character, the palate is juicy with citrusy acidity and a squirt of lime juice.

Vaguely reminiscent of sea, the finish is medium in length and intensity but definitely begs another sip — as well as some fresh goat's milk cheese.

Some other sauvignons to look for come from Martha Clara Vineyards, Shinn Estate Vineyards and Palmer Vineyards.

Gospel at Old Whalers' Church

By Stacy Dermont

The Bridgehampton Child Care and Recreation Center (BCCRC) will present a concert of the Howard Gospel Choir this Saturday, October 9 at the Old Whalers Church in Sag Harbor at 7 p.m.

The Howard Gospel Choir is based at Howard University in Washington, D.C. Federally chartered in 1867, Howard is a non-profit, private, historically black university. From its outset it has been nonsectarian and open to people of both genders and all races. Howard has graduate schools of pharmacy, law, medicine, dentistry and divinity, in addition to the undergraduate program. Notably BCCRC Executive Director Bonnie Cannon is herself a Howard grad and former member of its choir. She remembers fondly "how wonderful it was to perform as well as to learn from some of the best" while traveling with the group. She wanted to bring the choir here to perform in a fundraiser that the whole community could afford to support.

Among the nation's historically Black institutions of higher learning, Howard University and its Department of Music stand at the forefront, revered for its illustrious past and renowned as a premier provider of education for those who aspire to a career in music. Under Conductor J. Wheldon Norris, the choir has performed throughout the United States including concerts at the White House and the Kennedy Center.

Howard University has played an important role in American history, particularly during the Civil Rights Movement. Stokely Carmichael, also known as Kwame Toure, a student in the Department of Philosophy and the Howard University School of Divinity coined the term "Black Power." Alain Locke, Chair of the Department of Philosophy and first African American Rhodes Scholar, authored The New Negro, which helped to usher in the Harlem Renaissance. Ralph Bunche, the first Nobel Peace Prize winner of African descent, served as chair of the Department of Political Science.

Some of Howard's many famous alumni include actress and singer Phylicia Rashad and her sister choreographer Debbie Allen as well as Nobel Prize and Pulitzer Prize-winning author Toni Morrison, playwright and actor Ossie Davis and CNN anchor Fredricka Whitfield. The 1990s R&B group Shai was formed on the campus of Howard University.

The Old Whalers Church prides itself on being "An open door since 1844." Following its series of summer music events, this concert will be yet another opportunity for the public to bask in the beauty and history of this rare Egyptian Revival building.

This is not the first time that the sanctuary has hosted a gospel concert for the childcare center. It is an interesting historical point that this sanctuary was filled to capacity for a speech given by visiting Ku Klux Klansman Rev. Andrew Van Antwerpen in 1923. This church now serves all local residents with a food pantry and meeting spaces used for support groups and classes. It also houses the Conservative Synagogue of the Hamptons and the Sag Harbor Youth Center.

Bridgehampton National Bank has sponsored this event for the public. The $35 ticket to this event benefits the childcare center. To reserve a seat call 631-537-0616.

ART COMMENTARY

by Marion W. Weiss

Jackson and Lee

We couldn't quite figure it out when we first saw the current photographic exhibit featuring Jackson Pollock and Lee Krasner at the Pollock Krasner House. There has always been a slight "edge" to other shows of similar photographs, a subtle tension between the couple that became apparent in the composition of the images or the position of the figures.

This exhibit is different: Pollock and Krasner appear relaxed; personal elements are present, including Pollock's dog. The photographer even captured Pollock at work on a painting. There is not a lot of asymmetrical composition indicating imbalance. Simply put, all seemed well.

If that observation is true, it's because the photographer, Tony Vaccaro, functioned more as a friend than a photographer. However, such a declaration evokes a salient question: does the relationship between subject and artist have an effect on a work of art? There must be many examples proving that relationships do matter, but one which comes readily to mind is Modigliani's painting of his pregnant wife. The piece took the art world by storm, clearly showing the woman's extraordinary demeanor that only Modigliani could capture.

While other circumstances may be somewhat responsible, we are going to assume that Vaccaro's manner and method set the scene for relaxation. His friendship also played a part. How do we know? Because Vaccaro himself confirms it.

According to Vaccaro, in a conversation with this critic, he was always intrigued by the East Hampton art colony. He had his own opinions about why New York artists came here, citing the availability of land and houses when farmers, who were no longer able to make a living, moved from the area and traveled west. Yet Vaccaro had never met any of these artists until he moved into the New York neighborhood between 14th Street and 8th Street. The first night in his new apartment, and wanting to explore the area, he went out for a walk at 11:30 p.m. He stumbled upon a friendly-looking saloon and went in. It was the Cedar Bar, and there he began a friendship with Pollock.

Two years later, in 1953 , Vaccaro went to photograph Pollock and Krasner at home in The Springs; while those photographs were never published or shown, the results now hang on the walls of the Pollock Krasner House. He remembers that day (and the next three days) well. "Lee embraced me warmly when she opened the door, and Jackson asked if I wanted an espresso."

Asked how his working methods established a pleasant environment, Vaccaro notes that he never said, "Hold it, don't move," to his subjects. "In pictures by other photographers, it was known that Jackson had to hold a pose for as long as 45 minutes," Vaccaro adds. "I didn't ask him to do that."

It was during the shoot that Pollock made a startling statement as Vaccaro vividly recalls: "I want to leave something when I leave this earth; I have to do more than drip painting," Pollock said.

This one sentence has a salient significance when we look at Vaccaro's photographs.

There are pictures of Pollock standing with a work that features a round-shaped face. Vaccaro suggests this represented the different direction that Pollock had in mind, how he had gone back to his life as a teenager for inspiration. Vaccaro says that the wife of a friend who was at the shoot named the painting "Echo."

Tony Vaccaro

Pollock with his dog Ahab in 1953.

While Vaccaro brings a documentary feel to the photographs (he took pictures of World War 11 when he was stationed in Berlin, publishing a book called Entering Germany, 1944-1949) he also has a flair for the dramatic. Consider the photographs of Pollock sitting with his dog. Or the extreme close-up of Pollock himself.

Vaccaro captures a special humanity that rarely surfaces.

"Jackson and Lee, August 1953: Photographs by Tony Vaccaro" will be on view at The Pollock Krasner House through Oct. 30, 2010. Call for hours at 631-324-4929.

Food & Dining

SIMPLE ART OF COOKING

by Silvia Lehrer

Cavolfiore, say it over and over and it comes out sounding quite poetic and flowery. And in fact that's just what it is, cauliflower, meaning cabbage flower in Italian. There are any number of botanical varieties within the same family of cauliflower. For instance, broccoli and Romanesco are the same species and have similar structures. The snow white cauliflower as we know it is replaced by the green of these other vegetables. The green Italian Romanesco with its handsome spiky cluster of curds is an ancestral form. And by any other name cauliflower is simply a delicious and nutritious vegetable.

Cauliflower is low in fat, high in dietary fiber, carotenoid and vitamin C. While available through the year the vegetable is in its prime at your local farm stands and farmers market from September through November.

In honor of Columbus Day here are some of my favorite cavolfiore recipes. While not Italian, per se, I think Christopher would have also enjoyed the currently popular roasted cauliflower.

ROASTED SPICED CAULIFLOWER

The Combination of spices are sure to please!

Serves 4

1 medium head cauliflower
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1 tablespoon fresh thyme leaves
1/4 teaspoon ground coriander
1/8 teaspoon cayenne
Kosher salt to taste
Preheat oven to 425°F

Line a baking sheet with parchment paper or Silpat

1. Rinse, trim and separate the flowerets. Steam for 5 to 8 minutes until partly cooked but still firm. Pat dry with paper towel.

2. Transfer cauliflower to a bowl and toss with the remaining ingredients. Spread in a single uncrowded layer on the baking sheet and roast for 20 to 25 minutes until lightly browned and crisp.

CAVOLFIORI STRASCICATO

Sautéing or roasting cauliflower prevents a loss of nutrients as when boiling the vegetable.

Serves 4

1 medium cauliflower
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
2 to 3 cloves garlic, finely chopped
Kosher salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons finely chopped Italian parsley

1. Rinse, trim and separate the cauliflower into flowerets. Steam for 5 to 8 minutes until partly cooked but still firm. Pat dry with paper towel.

2. Heat the butter and oil in a large 12-inch skillet; when butter foam suibsides add the garlic. Saute over medium heat for 1 minute. Add the cauliflower and cook, stirring frequently while scraping the bottom of the pan, for 8 to 10 minutes until the flowerets are lightly browned and tender. Season with salt and pepper to taste and toss to mix. Remove from heat and sprinkle with parsley.

CAVOLFIORE CON POMODORI Y PARMIGIANO

This timely recipe is a reminder that cauliflower can be a luxurious vegetable when paired with the last of summer tomatoes and garden fresh basil.

Serves 6-8

1 medium farm-fresh cauliflower, about 1 1/2 - 2 pounds
Koher salt for the cooking water
Freshly ground pepper
5 ripe tomatoes, peeled, seeded and coarsely chopped
3 tablespoons chiffonade of fresh basil
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1/3 cup grated Parmesan cheese
2 tablespoons plain bread crumbs
2 tablespoons unsalted butter, cut into small dice

1. Cut off the base of the cauliflower and remove leaves. Pull the florets away from the core and soak in a bowl of cold water for 20 minutes. Drain.

2. Meanwhile, bring a large pot of water to a rolling boil. Add about a tablespoon kosher salt to taste and add the florets. Return to a boil and cook at a brisk simmer for 6-7 minutes; then drain and refresh under cool water. Drain well and pat dry to absorb as much of the moisture as possible.

Restaurant Review: Luce + Hawkins, Jamesport

By Stacy Dermont

This is a Rave review. Yes, that's "Rave" with a capital "R!" Sadly I don't have enough space here to tell you in detail about all the great food and drink I had for dinner at Luce + Hawkins last week. Happily their menu changes frequently so you can count on experiencing the very best local produce at its peak.

Executive Chef Keith Luce is a local farm boy who made good – really good. A James Beard Award winner, he's worked in New York, Chicago, California, France, Italy and most recently at the famed Herbfarm Restaurant outside Seattle. There he met wine expert Michael Kaminski who now serves as Director of Luce + Hawkins. What a pair and what pairings! A sense of fun and an acute attention to detail obtain in this establishment.

Luce and Kaminski offer a tasting menu with wine pairings that I highly recommend. My dining partner was particularly taken with his "Lemon Thyme Course" that featured Shinnecock scallops. A slight crunch on the outside, but all "butta" inside. A couple wines that stand out are Selene's Chesler 2004, a Napa red that can only be described as "a monster" and Jamesport Vineyard's Late Harvest Reisling 2007 which offers, among other attributes, a remarkable apricot finish. The Wine List is exceptional – it's extensive but very discerning. It includes some of my favorite Fingers Lakes wines as well as outstanding "locals" including Water's Crest rose and Lenz' chardonnay.

The restaurant's kitchen garden

Luce + Hawkins also offers a regular dinner menu rich with possibilities. I'll just touch on the "golden moments of bliss" that I experienced. The Steamed Bao Dumplings with Montauk tuna were sent out as an amuse-bouche. Our "bouches" were very amused. We could have made a meal of these and left happy. The NoFo duck wings are a big hit. I didn't indulge but my dining partner was enthusiastic about their tender stickiness. I tried a "Freestyle Shareable Side," Satur Farms Beets and Catapano Chevre. No way was I going to share this! The beets were almost crunchy and slightly vinegar, the cheese as smooth and creamy as can be. Wow! For my entrée I ordered an artisan pizza which "changes daily." This was my lucky day – pancetta, cauliflower and cheese! Salty-good, the small florettes were even better than cauliflower I've had on pannekoeken in the Netherlands. Monday's Daily Special was chicken soup – big chunks of succulent white mean, tender-crisp celery, carrots and fennel, very flavorful.

My dining partner's "Corn Shooter." If butter is heaven, this thing is a cloud in a glass.

Ah dessert. Luce + Hawkins little, made-to-order donuts did not disappoint. In fact the rosemary ice cream that accompanied them was a revelation, the perfect end to the meal, not that I stopped there. I also ordered "Suzy Q's Red Velvet Cake" with goat milk cream cheese. Hold on to your hats red velvet purists, this is better than the original. I swear. I am not a frosting person but I would lick this cake's filling off of any surface. My dining partner had the melon and the coconut tapioca. When we asked Assistant Director Tom Conner about the prepartion of the melon he matter-of-factly told us that it was compressed in a vaccuum seal – as if everyone does that with melon. They should – it was delicious.

Luce + Hawkins' staff is highly professional but they are equally "over-the-top foodies," in my opinion. To wit, their whole roasted chicken comes with a whole roasted butternut squash, their Sheperd's Pie contains three different house beefs, their ribs are boneless. They quote Dorothy Parker in the wine list and hang local artist Max Moran's glorious landscapes on the walls. Ah, perfection is a happy exhaustion for all involved.

Our server, Dina, was genuinely and infectuously enthusiastic about the menu. She knows the food well because the staff eats a family style dinner together before their shift begins. (I asked for a job application on the spot.)

I was pleasantly surprised to learn that a restaurant of this calibre is kid friendly. A father himself, Luce is happy to prepare burgers, pizza or buttered pasta as needed.

Luce + Hawkins at the Jedediah Hawkins Inn, 400 S. Jamespoert Ave., Jamesport is open year round, closed on Tue. and Wed. 631-722-2900, jedediahhawkinsinn.com.

HAMPTONS INTERNATIONAL FILM FESTIVAL

Miral: Julian Schnabel's Palestinian Film

By David Lion Rattiner

There is a movie coming to the Hamptons International Film Festival (HIFF) directed by filmmaker and artist Julian Schnabel that has everybody talking. It was written about in Vanity Fair after it showed at Toronto's film festival. The film is a mainstream account of Palestinian struggles from the rise of the state of Israel until the first Intifada.

Yikes. Now there's a movie to bring some buzz into the Hamptons.

In this film, called Miral, Schnabel casts the stunningly gorgeous and talented Freida Pinto, the Indian actress of Slumdog Millionaire, in the starring role. But it's the story that's carrying this movie from festival to festival with energy, proving to the world once again, what these festivals can do for talented moviemakers and actors.

The story chronicles an orphanage for Palestinian girls that people are trying to establish in Jerusalem after the 1948 partition of Palestine and the creation of the State of Israel. In a short period of time, the orphanage population grows to nearly 2,000, and the orphanage is renamed the Dar Al-Tifel Institute. The story revolves around an orphan, now 17, named Miral (played by Pinto), who was sent to the orphanage at the age of seven by her father after her mother died. Now, assigned to teach at a refugee camp, she is exposed to the reality of the struggle of the Palestinian people and falls in love with a political activist. Miral then becomes torn between physically fighting for her people or going down the path of reason and education towards peace.

Freida Pinto in the title role

The screenplay is an adaptation of a book by a Palestinian journalist named Rula Jebreal and the story is told, 100%, from the viewpoint of the Palestinians. There are scenes that show the injustices that Palestinians have faced and it brings to the fore a viewpoint that is rarely presented in Hollywood. But that is what Julian Schnabel, a Montauk resident, does best—bring about the unlikely that we love.

The film itself is beautiful, with beautiful people in it. The deep colors and artistic lighting of Schnabel's eye are impossible not to notice. The guy simply knows how to make something look incredibly magnificent and when you have a guy like Schnabel directing around an actress like Pinto, well, that just makes some damn fine moviemaking. Your mind does take notice that Pinto is not Palestinian, but Indian. But her appeal is so profound that you accept and trust Schnabel's choice for bringing her into the film. It's always fun to watch a master do what he does best, and Schnabel has done that with the film Miral.

The entire production can get your head spinning about the conflict in Palestine. Schnabel is telling a story from the point of view of a Palestinian, yet he comes from a Jewish American background. His mother was President of the Women's Zionist Organization of America. What's even stranger, or maybe a better word is cooler, is that the film is distributed by the pro-Israel, Jewish owner of the Weinstein Company, Harvey Weinstein.

Miral will be a hot ticket at this year's HIFF and another hot ticket will be the Conversation With... series, where Schnabel talks in an intimate setting before an audience about the film and about filmmaking. The talk includes a question and answer session which, with Julian Schnabel's larger than life presence, could be a movie in itself.

HONORING THE ARTIST

by Marion Wolberg Weiss

THE IMAGERY OF JAWS

This week's cover deviates from the norm. It's not a painting by an individual artist as usual but a publicity shot from the blockbuster movie Jaws.

Why Jaws to especially celebrate the 18th Annual Hamptons International Film Festival? First, the director, Steven Spielberg, has a home in East Hampton. Second, the primary actor, Roy Scheider, lived here for several years with his family before he, unfortunately, passed away.

But there are other reasons. The HIFF remains a venue primarily for independent movies. This critic would contend that Jaws, too, was envisioned as an independent work, with actors who weren't "stars" and financial backing qualifying it as low budget 35 years ago. Producers Richard Zanuck and David Brown were not yet established as Hollywood hotshots.

In fact, several years ago editor Verna Field admitted to this critic that the cast and crew were given "points" as payment for making the film, determined by how much it made at the box office. Everyone believed they would end up with very little money.

History proved them wrong. But making money wasn't the movie's driving force. The main reason Jaws should be honored on the cover is simple: its unique cinematic techniques, specifically, the editing, sound, character movement and camera movement.

First, the editing. (It's curious to note that many of film's best editors have been woman, including Dede Allen and Thelma Schoonmaker, Martin Scorsese's long-time editor. The pacing of the editing (transitions between images) was highly calculated to build suspense. For example, when the audience wanted to see what was happening in the water, Field delayed cutting to the relevant shot, often for only a few seconds, evoking anxiety in the viewer and the characters.

Cutting from subjective to objective images was extremely effective, too. Remember when Police Chief Brody (Scheider) would look at the water for sharks (objective) and then there was a cut to what he was seeing (subjective).

Extraordinary sound aesthetics also caused anticipation and fear. The shark's theme was the first and only sound heard as the credits appeared (and before there were any images on the screen). Sound from the radio and other beachgoers was used as well to cause distraction and anxiety for Scheider and the audience when the Chief watched for sharks in the water.

Character movement was similarly disconcerting. Consider Scheider when he was trying to get a glance at the water, and people would be constantly walking passed him, thus blocking his view.

Finally, there was arresting camera movement

Opening Night Film at HIFF

By Betty Sands

This year's opening night of the Hamptons International Film Festival will feature the U. S. premiere screening of Barney's Version. Based on the prize winning novel by Mordecai Richler, the screenplay was written by Michael Konyves and directed by Richard J. Lewis (CSI: Crime Scene Investigations, Whale Music).

This is Konyves' first major motion picture writing credit. He has previously written many television stories including "Fire & Ice: The Dragon Chronicles" for the USA network as well as the direct-to-video release Storm Cell under the name Michael Murphy.

The cast features one of America's most popular actors today, Paul Giamatti as Barney Panofsky and one of America's greats, two-time Academy Award winner Dustin Hoffman as his father. It also features Minnie Driver (Grosse Pointe Blank, Good Will Hunting) and Rosamund Pike (Die Another Day, Pride and Prejudice) and Bruce Greenwood (National Treasure: Book of Secrets, Star Trek).

What does Montreal television producer Barney Panofsky have to hide? Quite a bit it seems. Retold with humor and insight, Barney launches into a candid confessional spanning four decades and two continents. Included along the way are three wives (Driver, Pike and Rachelle Lefevre) and one outrageous, Jewish father.

When details of an unsolved mystery surface they cast a shadow on Barney's past. He has to revisit some dark and telling episodes. He traces the memories of his missteps as well as the good decisions that have shaped his life.

Giamatti portrays with panache the moving story of this cantankerous but warmhearted everyman.

Assisted at times by a charmingly dissolute best friend (Scott Speedman), Barney moves through the drama of a lifetime.

which is Spielberg's forte. From the film's opening scenes, there was a focus on opposition. The first shot was from the shark's POV as it moved through the water, dollying forward. The second shot showed teenagers on the beach around a campfire. This time the camera moved in the opposite direction, panning right.

The numerous moving camera shots were often juxtaposed with a still image: for example, lights reflecting on the water at night.

And then there's the zoom, the only one used during the movie, when Scheider sees blood in the water. It's an odd and unexpected shot, for sure, calling attention to itself. But it was right-on.

Of course, many viewers may dismiss the filmic techniques and give credit to the themes, instead. Certainly the shark as a metaphor deserves attention. Ditto for the various relationships that the characters have with the shark.

And let's not forget that even though Jaws was fiction, thousands of people wouldn't go into the ocean. There's no doubt that primal forces were at work in the film.

Yet Field and Spielberg made it all work through the magic of movies.

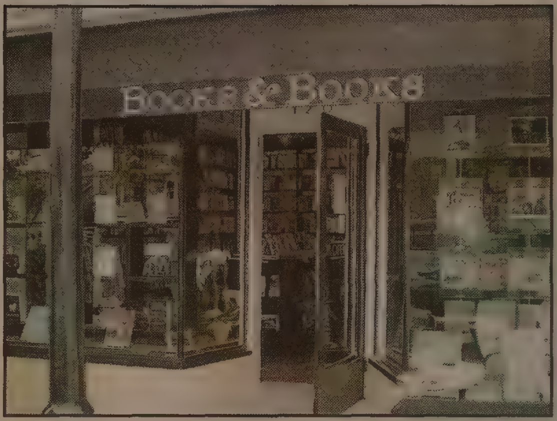
SHOP 'TIL YOU DROP

with Maria Tennariello

This week my shopping column is dedicated to Westhampton Beach Village. Last week and this week, the village has been welcoming the upcoming fall/winter season with so many wonderful activities and shopping adventures. Their annual Fall Sidewalk Sale is in progress and will continue Monday, October 11. Let's Shop Westhampton Beach!

The Greater Westhampton Chamber of Commerce is organized for the purpose of advancing business relations in the communities of the Villages of Quogue, Westhampton Beach and West Hampton Dunes as well as the surrounding hamlets of Quiogue, Remsenburg, Speonk and Westhampton. Their goal is to stimulate business within this area as well as to work for the improvement of the general economic and cultural welfare of the overall community. You can learn more about these great and vibrant communities and what they have to offer by visiting whbcc.com call 631-288-3337 or stop in at their office at 7 Glovers Lane.

Wetter or Not



Books & Books

One of my very all time favorites, O'suzanna, 108 Main St, famous for the best gifts and home furnishings not only in Westhampton Beach but on the entire East End. O'suzanna has a 50% off sale happening, with some very special, never-before-on-sale items such as Italian ceramics and Venetian chandeliers. In the mix are unique items that are worth a look, including Steven Vaubel jewelry, table and bed linens, silk flowers, candles, body products, costume jewelry, Vera Bradley and more. It's worth the trip to the beautiful village of Westhampton Beach just for the O'suzanna sale. 631-288-2202

Tranquility, 121D Main Street (in the shopping cove), is the perfect place to find the perfect gift for your (I won't say it) everyone. The shop is filled with affordable, unique gifts and treats for yourself too. 631-998-3308.

Beach Blossoms, 83D Main Street is having a Super Sale, offering 50% off storewide (on select merchandise) plus an extra 20% off during the sidewalk sale days. The newly planted shop has quality soft and snuggly clothing for infants and children, and blankets, strollers, organic quality toys, designer blankets and buntings by Luxe, all at affordable prices. 631-288-7610

Wetter or Not has been sitting at 123 Main Street (suite 8), for 14 years. The shop is the perfect destination for bathing suits, cover-ups, sandals, hats, bags, totes, jewelry and more. Just think water! Available are designer lines that include Ralph Lauren, Trina Turk, Juicy, Mark Jacobs, DKNY, Calvin Klein, and Gottex. Here they can fit everyone women, men, boys, girls. Call 631-288-0682 or visit wetterornot.org

Bays Carpet, 139 Main Street, has been serving the floor covering needs of East End residents for over 25 years. The store carries all major brands including Schumacher, Helios, Shaw, Mohawk and Hunter Douglas. Owners John Reale and Vincent Rosante's goals are to provide friendly service and customer satisfaction on all their carpeting, area rugs, wood and laminate flooring, as well as provide their customers with the best in shades, blinds, shutters, and more, all under one roof! Open Monday–Saturday, 10 a.m.–5p.m., 631-288-1170

An oldie but a goody, since 1954, Westhampton Beach True Value Hardware has greeted locals and visitors alike with a warm smile, friendly advice, and the know-how to help get any job done. This is the place where neighbors stop in to say hi and local craftsmen get their supplies, and it's where they share their expertise, providing superior products and outstanding service. The store professionals are trained specialists whose experience and helpful advice will ensure the success of every project. Conveniently located on Montauk Highway, help is truly just around the corner. Information: 631-288-1544, westhamptontruevalue.com

Stupid Driving Tricks (SDTs)

By Stacy Dermont

I'm no "car doctor" but I have a working knowledge of how to operate an automobile in a legal fashion. I observe and obey traffic signs. I sometimes feel terribly alone in my lawfulness.

On a typical weekend morning I observe an average of 4.5 Stupid Driving Tricks (SDTs) between Sag Harbor and Southampton. Of course stupid acts committed while operating a motor vehicle on a public roadway are not just stupid – they are deadly dangerous.

Slipping through "pink" traffic lights, speeding, tailgating and driving while under the influence of an inane cell phone conversation can all get you – and innocent bystanders – killed.

Maybe people who perpetrate these acts don't know just how stupid they are. Here's a clue: multiple scientific studies have shown that distracted driving (texting, cell phoning, eating) results in the equivalent of DRUNK driving. We're all against that, right?

Hamptons Stupid Driving Trick #1

In 2008, distracted driving caused nearly 6,000 deaths and injured over 500,000 Americans, according to the National Highway Safety Transportation Administration. In New Jersey alone 1,821 crashes involved handheld devices and another 1,383 involved hands-free phones during that same year.

How can you guard against distracted driving? Put your cell phone in your trunk when you drive. If the driver of a car that you are riding in receives a cell phone call – stand up for your safety and insist that he or she pull over to take the call. This is a not a casual matter, this is your life.

Having driven on the South Fork for 10 years now, it is clear to me that some drivers simply don't know the rules of the road. Two particular "black holes of knowledge" are the four-way stop and the use of a rotary (traffic circle).

Here's the deal at a four-way stop: Come to a complete stop. Look at the other stops to see if there are any other vehicles stopped or moving. The vehicles leave the stop signs in the same order in which they arrived. The first vehicle to arrive at a complete stop is the first vehicle allowed to leave. If there is more than one vehicle arriving at the same time at the four-way stop, the vehicle furthest to the right is allowed to leave first. Allow a few seconds to make sure no one else takes off even if it is your turn to leave first. Many people do not follow this rule, even though it is the legal way to leave a four-way stop. Frequently a driver with the right-of-way will wave another on to precede them. (I don't know why.)

We received a Letter to the Editor at Dan's Papers a couple of months ago that asserted that signs should be posted at the Scuttlehole rotary indicating that traffic in the circle has the right-of-way. That sounded like a waste of taxpayers' money – of course oncoming traffic has the right-of-way. The rotary is a one-way road that runs counter-clockwise. Everyone knows this. Then it happened to me.

I entered the rotary from the west side of Scuttlehole. Immediately I had to slam on my brakes because the black van in front of me suddenly stopped to let a car enter the rotary from the south entrance (Mitchell's Lane). The van's license plate read "LIVERY" at the bottom. This is a professional driver behind the wheel!

A week later I got "the full treatment" at the Scuttlehole rotary. I pulled up to enter from the south where I waited briefly for a brake in the traffic. But lo! A white van in the circle came to an abrupt stop to let me in. It was as if the village idiot had just thrown his cloak over a puddle to allow me to cross. I had to accept so as not to delay traffic further - but I felt dirty.

Think of the rotary as a roadway (which …it is). When you're driving down a highway you don't hit the breaks to allow every vehicle in every driveway, parking lot and side street to enter in front of you…do you?

Could all of the Stupid Driving Tricks in the Hamptons be attributed to peoples' overactive politeness?

Is the Police Blotter full of our most gracious citizens? Maybe people here are just too POLITE to not have "one more for the road," to take that call, to respond to that text or to not yield the right-of-way? It's something to ponder, not when you're behind the wheel though, please. Concentrate and drive safely.

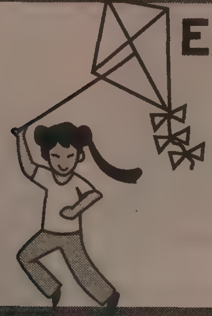
What I Did During My Summer Vacation



EAST END KID

by Emily Hart Post

By Emily Hart Post

I am so happy to be back in Dan's Papers. I had lots of fun when I did the column in the past and think it will be more fun now. OK – now about the summer. I am now nine and my life as a tween has begun – part kid, part almost teen. Things change – for example my birthday party in April was not making clay things, it was an "American Idol" theme party where all the girls sang, like in auditions. No Steven Tyler there and also everyone advanced to Hollywood.

This summer was probably the best of my young life. I got the chance to go to Ross School Camp every day and also learned about horses in the Hamptons. Ross is a wonderful place where we kids (and our parents) choose a major for each part of the summer. For the first month I chose riding – no surprise there. I got to ride every day and learned how to take care of my pony. I also took some lessons at a stable to get a little better. Not ready for the Hampton Classic yet and you won't see me playing polo, but I found out how wonderful horses are. If Dad's Next Island virtual world takes off maybe I will ask him to lease a horse for me next year. I also went to polo in Bridgehampton – where I was one of the few who actually watched. I went to the Hampton Classic and walked around in my outfit and watched the great riders compete. I think my best horse moment was going to a special screening of the movie Secretariat in Wainscott. I think I did a no-no and asked Dad a few questions during the movie and got some people looking at me. Oh seriously, I am just a kid. I loved the movie about the world's greatest racehorse and loved seeing Secretariat's great grandson Rare Prince who was there in person. I got to pet him. The horse was a little nervous.

Back to Ross School – in the second month I joined the Theater Group and we put on a musical for the guests. I got to sing a few songs – yes I was nervous, but I had tried Karaoke at my party so I did it. We had so much fun with our musical but not sure about the guests, unless they were the parents who thought it was ready for Broadway.

Emily's 9th American Idol Karaoke Birthday Pary

So that was a big part of my summer – I did get to go with my Mom (Katlean de Monchy) to some family-type events and that was also fun. Now it is the Fall and school is my focus but I admit I cannot wait for my next Hamptons summer! If you have any events or want to comment please e-mail my dad – I am too young for my own e-mail yet.

LETTERS

THINK BEFORE YOU SPEAK!

Dear Dan,

As a resident of Hampton Bays, I'd like to know what David Lion Rattiner was thinking in his column about Dennis Rodman, when he wrote "Nobody wants this kind of thing in the Hamptons, Not even Hampton Bays! We're better than this. Right?"

As if bad behavior is usually accepted in Hampton Bays and not anywhere else? That comment was completely unwarranted.

Patricia Mason

I have no idea what my son is thinking. – DR.

DISTURBING ARTICLE

Dear Dan,

While I enjoy reading your paper, a recent article you wrote entitled "Labor Day" disturbed me. Obviously this is a free country and, as such, you are free to criticize the President. Unfortunately, political discourse in this country has recently been the victim of a campaign of misinformation. The constant stream of false claims has made any attempt to engage in honest debate about the important issues we face nearly impossible. So I was somewhat taken aback when you published one of the falsehoods that has been repeatedly pushed by some segments of the media.

In your article, you state "Obama spent over a trillion dollars bailing out Wall Street." This is simply not true. President Bush bailed out Wall Street. This may seem like an innocent mistake, and I am sure it was, but it comes at a time when certain people are attempting to rewrite history: "there were no terrorist attacks when Bush was president" "Obama started the Afghan war" "the President is a Muslim who was born in Kenya" "death panels will be pulling the plug on your grandmother."

Please don't join this parade.

SAVE OUR COLLEGE

Dear Dan,

"Stony Brook University Closes Southampton Campus Again…Decision Made On October 4, By University Council"

That will be the headline unless the East End community rises up in full force to impress the University Council with the importance of the school to the community. I want to encourage you, Mr. Rattiner, to follow up the Illegal Closing Article with a major article that will encourage the entire community to become involved and to show support for the Stony Brook Southampton College. This includes Superintendents and Mayors of the local municipalities who should be out in force to defend the interests of the citizens of the community.

Fred Thiele's letter describes the issue perfectly and should be reprinted in it's entirety and then the leadership and citizens of the East End should be encouraged to attend the meeting on the 28, and to write letters in support of the school. Please ask people to write to Kevin Law, the President of LIPA and Chairman of the Stony Brook University Council, and to call Susan Hines 631-632-6270 in order to attend this critical meeting. "Seating is limited" is not acceptable when there is a serious public issue.

Yours truly,
Edvin Karl Stromsten,
Chairman of the Planning and Governance Committee of the American Institute of Architects Peconic Chapter

We published it in its entirety. – DR

KUDOS TO ASSEMBLYMAN FRED THIELE

Dear Dan,

I'm not surprised with the judge's ruling in the Southampton students' lawsuit. I also won't be surprised if the Stony Brook president has the university council go through the motions to be in compliance with the law, with after-the-fact "approvals" of something that has already been illegally implemented. If that is what happens next, that entire council will be seen as a total sham.

In several news articles, Stony Brook representatives state that the council now "will meet to discuss the closure." That is many months too late and much of the horse following the cart. As a wise man recently said in reference to this situation, "one cannot offer to pay for what one has already been caught shoplifting."

The law requires that such a discussion, along with reviews, alternative considerations, recommendations, and approvals be done before a decision can even be made, never mind implemented. The university president broke the law and harmed 800 students in the process, period. The SUNY chancellor, who gave him free-reign to do so, has said that she "stands firmly behind" him and his action. These highly paid administrators of a public state institution violated state law and hundreds of students were harmed because of them. They both must be held accountable and should be fired for the debacle they caused.

I applaud your Assemblyman, Fred Thiele, for speaking out so strongly and relentlessly fighting for these students and the interests of your community in this situation.

If that university council is wise, it will restore Southampton's four-year residential undergraduate college to full operations, re-instate the environmental sustainability programs, and bring back the students and faculty and resume classes first. Then all stakeholders can have an open meeting to discuss expanded uses for the campus and the other cost-saving alternatives that the president has admitted he never even considered before illegally cutting out my child's college for his own agenda.

Sincerely,
Julie Semente
Staten Island

(Parent of a Stony Brook Southampton sophomore who is also one of the plaintiffs vindicated in the above-mentioned lawsuit)

KISSES

Dear Dan,

Splendid! A word that comes to immediate mind. Grateful! One that pursues closely. Followed by professional and expectant. These are just a few deserved adjectives I toss to you, good friend, for you have done it again – maintaining the highest journalistic standards.

Your staff follows your lead. Please give all of them, including Barry Gordin, my gratitude and my appreciative thanks.

Yours forever and always,
Cliff Robertson

Thank you, sir. – DR

POLICE BLOTTER

Plant Thief

A business in East Hampton reported several plants and items stolen from their headquarters, including Japanese junipers, a hydrangea and a log rack. Those items on the black market are worth approximately nothing.

Where's the Fire?

A man in Sag Harbor drove his car directly into the doors of the Main Street Firehouse. The Firehouse did not suffer much damage, but the man's reputation as a driver, well, let's just say that he's going to be made fun of for the rest of his life.

Exposure

A man in Mattituck was arrested after he was accused of exposing himself and cursing at employees and diners at McDonalds. The man was arrested by police shortly after the incident. Apparently, the man decided that it was a good idea to show off his McWeener after he ate his Big Mac.

Shelter Island

AHHHHHHHH!!!!!
SOMEBODY!!!! NOOOOOO!!!

All I Need Is One Mic

A man at a karaoke bar in Hampton Bays began singing along to a song and then became irate after he received boos from the crowd. The man began to curse over the microphone, which was turned off. Reports from the crowd indicate that not only did the man have a bad voice, but he also had a very dirty mouth.

Fake Bills

Counterfeit bills showed up in Bridgehampton after a bank employee noticed one of the bills and called police. If you think about it though, with the state of the national deficit, isn't all are money sort of counterfeit these days?

Stolen

Two men were arrested in a huge scandal in Southampton involving stolen items from a seafood market. The rash of burglaries prompted a police investigation, and involved over $1,000 worth of stolen seafood. The detective who solved the case noticed that something was fishy about the suspects.

J-E-T-S

Reports throughout the Hamptons indicate that Jets fans are so happy about the recent performance of their team that they are NOT causing problems in bars such as throwing drinks, cursing and fighting with Patriot fans. Oddly, there have been reports of Jets fans smiling and buying each other drinks.
